COURTESY TO WOMEN.

Courtesy on the part of college men towards women is a matter that has always been boasted of at Oregon. With the revered tradition here that everyone says hello to everyone revered tradition here that everyone says hello to everyone courtesy due to women—men often neglect to doff their hats to the women to whom they speak.

No complaint can be made that students are not upholding the old Oregon tradition of speaking to their fellow students. Although the University is much larger this year than in the past, few if any students have failed to uphold the old tradition.

But women have protested, and rightly, that men have neglected to undertake the trouble to express the conventional courtesy of lifting their hats when speaking. This is especially noticeable among freshmen. There is no excuse for such neglect on the part of anyone, and there is but one remedy. Lift your hat or cap, or at least make a noticeable attempt to do so when you speak to women on the campus.

THE HOMECOMING BONFIRE.

There is just one week left until Homecoming. Very few freshmen, with the exception of members of the bonfire committee, have done any work up to this time to make the bonfire a reality. Twice this week volunteers have been called upon to help with the work on the pyre, but the men have failed to turn out for any real work, according to members of the bonfire committee.

The big Homecoming bonfire is one of the real features of the week-end for visiting alumni. Probably every member of the freshman class realizes the importance of the bonfire, but up to the present time the attitude has been that of letting someone else do the real work.

Freshmen, it is up to you to see that the bonfire is completed by next Friday night! You will be called on to gather material, to help in the erection, and to guard the pyre. This bonfire is a matter of class loyalty to the school. It is the first chance freshmen have had to really work for Oregon. It is a hard test, but it is up to the class of 1924 to prove themselves.

For the next week, freshmen, have but one ideal, the greatest bonfire ever!

GOOD ENGLISH WEEK HELD AT CAMPUS HIGH

Students' Speech Improves; University Teacher Addresses First Assembly.

"Good English Week" at the campus high has brought about a very noticeable improvement in grammar, as well as much fun at the expense of continual users of slang. Thursday, "tag day," each pupil was given six "Watch your speech" tags. Every time any one employed a split infinitive or a word unrecognized by Webster one of the tags had to be signed and placed in a "Pandora's box." Needless to say, the box of Pandora was filled very rapidly.

Two assemblies during the week put particular emphasis upon the need for better use of the English language. Miss Ida Turney, of the English department at the University, spoke at the first assembly showing how attention to grammar really meant patriotism in the end.

That "Good English doesn't mean poor French" was demonstrated by the advanced French class, who put on a clever skit featuring the man who punctuates his speech with mispronounced French words in an attempt to appear learned.

The campaign for good English was not brought into the University. "College students are supposed to know how to speak correctly," said Miss Mary Perkins, in charge of the movement in Eugene. But she stressed the word "supposed."

SWEATERS GIVEN TO GIRLS.

The point system used in awarding sweaters throughout the institutions of the country for women's participation in college athletics is being considered at O. A. C.

Hugo Bezdek, former University of Oregon coach, has signed a seven year contract as coach of the Penn State eleven. This is the longest contract ever known of in football history.
