MONDAY'S CELEBRATION

Monday afternoon an impromptu rally burst forth on the campus in celebration of Saturday's victory over Washington. Perhaps the majority of the student body gathered in front of Villard to hear speeches and to give yells. Oregon spirit carried students that far, but it was not Oregon spirit that took the students further. It was the feeling of most of those who attended the rally that a successful celebration could not be staged without a dance. And forthwith, in spite of the warnings of the A. S. U. O. president, and in spite of the declaration by the varsity yell king that the rally was over, the larger share of the student body marched downtown to dance.

The occurrence is history now. Although no penalties have been fixed by the faculty, and it is hoped none will be, the Emerald would like to know if the leaders of the dance movement, if there were any, feel that they were boosting Oregon or Oregon spirit by encouraging students to cut classes and to dance on a regular class day??

For those students who cut no classes, there should be no penalty fixed by the faculty; for those who did cut classes, the penalty should be that of an ordinary absence. The movement was entirely natural, and it is the general belief that there were no leaders. Yet there should be some censure given to the students who took part in the demonstration following the rally on Villard steps, censure expressed by those upper-classmen who know that true Oregon spirit does not find expression in a self-determined half-holiday and a dance.

The fundamental purpose of a university is to supply knowledge to its students. When those students defy their teachers to the extent of taking an afternoon off, it makes a serious break in the carefully planned class programs for the quarter. Such a defiance as that of Monday afternoon gives the faculty a right to name a punishment for those who at least led the movement.

From the other angle, Oregon spirit, which perhaps the University has capitalized too much, still cannot be crushed by faculty action. If those students who took part in the impromptu dance dally and whole-heartedly believed that they were performing an important service towards upholding Oregon spirit, they should not be censured. But it is doubtful if there were any who thought that.

The temptation of a half-holiday combined with a popular afternoon dance was too great for those who succumbed, and Oregon spirit was only seized upon as a likely excuse. Was the Oregon football eleven heartened by the knowledge that other students were permitted to dance while they must practice for the coming games? Was the supposed spirit of the dance conveyed to them in any way? The purpose of a rally is to imbibe not only the participants, but those for whom cheers are given as well, with the spirit of the occasion. How much of this spirit of Monday afternoon was carried to the practice field? The dance Saturday night should have been the celebration of Monday afternoon.

If Oregon should defeat O. A. C. next Saturday, the University authorities might be prevailed upon to grant the student body the privilege of holding a celebration. But an unauthorized celebration should not break out during class hours. Let's have a rally celebration by all means, but let it be the right kind.

No student who has ever spent his last cent to witness an O. A. C. Oregon football game has ever regretted it. It is the one grand football fight of the year. This year, the two teams are more evenly matched than for several years, according to scores made by both teams against Washington. The Aggies won from the northerners on their home field at Seattle, while Oregon playing on Hayward field defeated the Sun Dodgers by a somewhat larger score. The Aggies have been greatly strengthened since their last game, however, and the Oregon eleven realizes that it will face the season's hardest game next Saturday. Oregon fight may decide the game, and a fighting rooters section is needed for support. On to Corvallis!

HAMSTREET AN EDITOR

Former Oregon Student Becomes Editor of Tillamook Headlight.

While attending the Tillamook county teachers institute John C. Almack, assistant director of the extension division, met Harold Hamstreet, a graduate of the class of 1917, who has recently become editor and part owner of the Tillamook Headlight. Hamstreet and Leslie Harrison now edit and publish that paper.

During his senior year in the University Hamstreet was editor of the Emerald and was prominent in other student activities. For a time after his graduation he edited the Sheridan Sun and was later on the copy desks of the Portland Oregonian and Telegram.

9,000 Covered Seats.
The big grandstand is completed so that now there are covered seats for about 9000 making a total seating capacity of about 11,000. Most of the seats in the stand have been sold already, according to Mr. McClain.

A special admission price of 50 cents has been made to Oregon Students. The round trip railway fare to Corvallis will be $3.50. Tickets for the game may be secured at the Co-op.

CHAPERON IS CHOSEN

Miss Mabel Cummings To Be in Charge of Girls on Corvallis Trip.

Dean Fox announces that Miss Mabel Cummings, head of the women's physical education department, is to be the officially recognized chaperon for the University women going to attend the game at Corvallis, and the Dean wishes to bespeak thoughtful attention to Miss Cummings in her official capacity. She will be on the special train and will return with the girls on that train after the game.

Mrs. Fawcett, dean of women of Oregon Agricultural College, has written extending a letter of welcome to the Oregon women, also stating that the students of O. A. C. are planning to entertain our girls during the game.

COLOR SERGEANTS APPOINTED.

Sergeants Edwin Keech and Hugh Latham of Company C, have been appointed color sergeants. They will remain on duty with Company C, except during ceremonies. Cadet William S. Hopkins of Company D, has been appointed sergeant and assigned to Company C.

ONLY FEW INJURIES RESULT OF BATTLE

last night for the first time this year and he may start in this position against the Beavers.

It is certain that Ed Ward who suffered a broken collar bone in the Stanford game will not be able to start against the Aggies. Ed is in all probability laid out for the rest of the season, but he hates to admit it and stays with the team through practice every night. Frank Hill is suffering with an attack of boils which is keeping him out of practice this week, so it is not probable that the speedy little back will be in condition to get into the game at Corvallis. This is so far the extent of the hospital list, barring any sickness which may come up this week.

The Oregon line will be outweighed about 10 pounds or more by the Aggies in the game. O. A. C. has an extremely heavy line this year and one which the speedy California backs were hard put to penetrate, nor, did Washington make any yardage through the Aggies line, but then Washington did not make any yardage through the Oregon line either and Oregon has not played California. The Aggies backfield will probably stack up to about the same weight as the lemon-yellow quartet, although they may have a slight advantage. Huge McKenna, the 135 pound quarterback of the Aggies will bring their weight average down as compared with "Bill" Steers, Oregon's 180 pound pilot.

It is definitely announced from the Corvallis campus that "Gap" Powell, the Aggie star fullback will not be in the game against Oregon. Powell was seriously injured in the Washington game and has been out ever since. Just how much difference it would make in the Aggie team if he were in the line-up, is a matter for speculation. According to pretty reliable information, Powell did not play up to his standard in the Washington game, or in the early season games this year. Powell was at his best in the Oregon-O. A. C. game last year.

Probably tonight will see the last scrimmage on the old practice field this year for the Oregon squad. Last night's work was taken up in offensive scrimmage for the first string while it is expected that a little defensive scrimmage drill may be run off tonight. The team will then probably be content with light signal workouts until Saturday. The first of next week will see the squad on their way to Los Angeles to play the fast University of Southern California eleven on Thanksgiving Day.
