

FAIRBANKS PREDICTS STRONG ART SCHOOL

Oregon to Have Best in West Says Instructor

SCULPTURING IS TAUGHT Professor Declares Students Have Spirit of Work

The University of Oregon is going to have the biggest art school in the west, in the opinion of Avard Fairbanks, professor of sculptor in the school of fine arts.

"The students are sincere, with good, clean, beautiful ideals in their lives, and with such strength as a foundation I have no hesitancy in saying that a great art school can be built upon it. Great artists and a great art can come of it, if the training in technique is made sufficient," said Mr. Fairbanks.

"In our sculpturing classes we plan to find the students bearing, what they can do," he continued. "When the student becomes sufficiently advanced to specialize in one branch of sculpture we can develop to quite a high position the art world."

It is Mr. Fairbanks' plan in the elementary modeling classes to give the idea of sculpture as a whole. He said "people generally have an idea that sculpturing is an imitative art and that the only thing that a sculptor has to do is to copy nature. Such is the method of most elementary training, but art is not imitative, art is the expression of the soul, and sculpture is the expression of the soul through the medium of forms. In explaining the requirements of a great sculptor, Mr. Fairbanks said, "he must be very versatile in order that he may express the spirit of his people, state, nation or the world at large. He must have a good understanding of the social psychology, not so much the technical part as the understanding of the people as a whole. The sculptor must be able to portray great epochs and the distinctiveness of the races of people."

The classes in sculpturing meet once a week, with special work in creative composition once every month. These creative compositions are designed to give a student an idea of the work a sculptor has to do, and also to give a stimulus to the student toward the development of his own ideas in some form of composition, according to Mr. Fairbanks. The first problem in this regard given to the students was the problem of a representation of Victory to be done in relief in the form of a lunette. "The result was surprising," said Mr. Fairbanks. "The students were handicapped by their insufficient knowledge of the anatomy of the human form, but the spirit was with the work. This is the biggest essential, technique can be taught, but the spirit of a work and the soul of a work of art can never be acquired."

HARLAN HOLMES TAKES CALIFORNIA POSITION

Fish and Game Commission Scientific Work to Be Done by Major in Zoology.

Harlan Holmes, a major in the zoology department, has accepted an offer from the Fish and Game Commission of California, to do scientific work with them in conjunction with the committee in the laboratory at Pacific Grove. He will develop the life history of the sardine in his laboratory work.

A big project is being planned by the study of the life history of minor zoological specimens. The commission is taking men for this work from a number of colleges, and is training them to conduct investigations there. They are paid a lucrative salary while this training is being received.

Mr. Holmes was sent from the University as a representative of the zoological department because of the unusual amount of ability and interest he has displayed as a student here. He has done a large amount of advanced work for the department as an assistant in the first year work, and was for two years an assistant in the cat anatomy laboratory.

During the summer, Holmes and Herbert Prescott surveyed the country around Mt. Pitt for specimens of birds and various small mammals and presented a large and valuable collection to the museum as a result of their work.

Mr. Holmes is from Ashland, and was in his senior year at the University when he received the offer. He expects to finish his college course at some later date. On his way south he plans to stop off at Berkeley and visit the museums at the University of California.

NEW LAW WORK TO BE GIVEN; COURSES NAMED

Water Rights Is Given for First Time; Workmen's Compensation is Featured.

The work for the winter term in the law school has been tentatively outlined. The following are the subjects and the instructors who will handle them: Bills and notes, contracts, evidence, equity, by Dean Hale; law of officers, by Professor Barnett; agency, water rights, by Professor Larremore; torts, corporations, by Professor Warner; real property, moot court, by Professor Dalzell; mortgages, by Mr. Bryson.

A new course never yet given in the law school is one in water rights under Professor Larremore. This subject is being given in most of the western law schools, such as Stanford and California, and its importance is recognized. Professor Larremore states that the course will be of benefit to those students who come from regions where irrigation and water rights are involved. Questions which affect this state upon riparian rights will also be taken up.

The course in agency will be more thoroughly covered this year, occupying two terms. The relationships between principal and agent and master and servant will be treated to a greater extent this year. Another feature is the workmen's compensation law.

Three games were played yesterday afternoon in the doughnut basketball league. In the indoor gym the Oregon club walked on Friendly hall, 21-9 and the Fijis took over the long end of a 25-5 score from Delta Theta Pi. On the outdoor court in a fast rough game the speedy Owls took the measure of Bachelordon 26-18.

The Oregon club quintet had little trouble with the Friendly hall five and led the dorm men throughout the contest. Though clearly outclassed the defeated team put up a game fight. For the Oregon club Veatch and Stone were the shining stars, Stone playing an especially brilliant game for the winners. By far the best game of the evening was that played between the Owls and the Bachelors, which the Owls won 26-18. A close game it was featured by the consistent team work of the Owls and the individual brilliance of Clark and Black for Bachelordon. For the Owls, Zimmerman, center, and Say, forward, were the main point-getters, while Jimmy Ross played a good game at guard.
