TRUE HONOR.

The honor system as developed in the school of law of the University is one which may prove interesting to everyone interested in the honor system and its introduction here. Also worth noticing are the words of the dean of the school, who says: "I believe in one extreme or the other, either the true honor system as we have here, or the most systematic method of watching. The system that is in between is really the most vicious."

To dig up a dead issue, it might be appropriate to fit the words of Dean Hale to the honor code which was recently rejected by the students of the school of commerce. Was the honor system which was proposed for the school of commerce a true honor system, or was it the in-between system which Dean Hale classes as "the most vicious?"

In the honor system as used in the school of law, it will be noted, the students are not required to report on cheaters. This was the point to which most objection was raised when the commerce students voted on the code for their school. The law school has a true honor system where a student is absolutely on his honor not to cheat. The commerce school, had the proposed system been approved, would have had a system where the students were not on their honor not to cheat, but rather on their honor to tell on fellow-students who were cheating. The system as proposed for the school of commerce was the in-between system.

Dean Hale may not have had the system which the commerce students voted down in mind when he made the above statement. But we believe that he has struck the chord which will eventually result in the adoption of a true honor system at the University of Oregon.

As the Emerald has said before, we believe that the students of the University of Oregon would be heartily in favor of a true honor system, where action against cheaters would be taken by student ostracism rather than by "tattling." Oregon students want an honor system, and they want student government. The faculty are tired of "schoolmastering," and are willing to have students take care of their own cases of dishonor. Eventually the faculty and students will get together and Oregon will have a true honor system.

The interest which Oregon's alumni take in the welfare of the institution is encouraging proof that there really is something in "Oregon Spirit." Whether they are right or wrong, it is always worth while to listen to the viewpoint of the graduates of the University of Oregon. They might not be as closely informed on matters of student welfare as are the students themselves, but it is encouraging to all of us to now that alumni and friends of the University are taking vital interest in what is happening here. May Oregon ever lose the friendship and loyalty of its alumni!

RADUATE WILL SPEAK

Whlon H. Day to Talk Next Thursday at Assembly.

"There is only one college in the Chinese empire of 350,000,000 inhabitants," says Mahlon H. Day in a report to Charlie Stenon, alumni secretary. Mr. Day who speaks in assembly next Thursday, is an old graduate of Oregon and is now acting home secretary for the Canton Christian college, which has its headquarters in New York. The college, according to Mr. Day, is independent. It is organized by the board of regents in New York state and is supported by the Rockefeller Foundation and by individuals both in the United States and China. Its initial purpose is education adapted to the needs of China.

The student body of the school is made up of the upper classes and totals 800, preparatory students included. It has been highly successful and its graduates are for the most part holding big positions. One for instance, is commissioner of finances for the South American government and another is manager of one of the big railroads.

There are 90 teachers on the staff and 60 are Americans, graduates of schools as Harvard, Yale, Vassar, Stanford, Johns Hopkins, and various state universities. They specialize in teachers' training but they offer all the regular courses that are found in the modern American universities and colleges.

Mr. Day was at the college for a number of months within the last year and his lecture will probably center about China.

WHAT THE OLD GRADS ARE DOING.

John Curria Veatch, a member of Kappa Sigma and a graduate of 1907, is now assistant United States attorney for the state of Oregon. He proved his power as a speaker while still in college and was an interstate debater for four years, won the alumni debate medal in 1906 and was elected to Phi Delta Phi, national law fraternity. After his graduation he attended the Chicago Art Institute and later taught for some years in the Portland schools. For a time he practiced law in Portland and was so successful that he secured his present position.

The Campus Cynic

MISSIONARIES TO KOOFLESTAN.

To the Editor:
Milo G. Gubb, missionary from Kooflestan, was on the campus yesterday.

"Kooflestan," said Mr. Gubb in an address given at a banquet attended by a thousand wildly cheering students, "is a province situated about fifteen hundred kilometers due east of the third hole in the great wall of China. It is entirely surrounded by the Agar-Aaar mountains which are 17 versts high at the lowest point.

"The chief diet of the Kooflestanians is the pickled hock of the gilly fish and the rear spare-ribs of the bald-faced Pooh Pooh Bird. They also eat the kernels of the popcorn trees which grow in dense thickets and attain a height of about seven feet.

"There is a crying need in Kooflestan for missionaries. No one in this country can appreciate the low standards of morality that prevail in that heathen land. People go about without shoes, displaying their bare feet with brazen indifference and, what is more deplorable, sentiment is openly displayed. It is a common thing to see man and wife publicly kiss each other. The natives wash their teeth but once daily; they still retain the community tin drinking cup and the old-fashioned roller towel; and in all Kooflestan there is but one house with more than two bath tubs. I live in that."

"What are your plans, Mr. Gubb?" asked an enthusiastic admirer.

Missionary Gubb's eyes lit with a pale, pink enthusiasm. "Money for Kooflestan, missionaries for Kooflestan. We must have a large force of missionaries, supervised by me of course. I want all of you young men and women to consider this great work. Of course it means work and privation. The first ten years are always the hardest. But we must learn to labor, endure, and be thankful." The great crowd of students cheered this statement wildly.

"How many thousands of dollars are you trying to raise for Kooflestan missions?" asked the interviewer.

"Thousands?" ejaculated Missionary

Gubb scornfully. "That is a mere bagatelle. We must have millions. This great and prosperous country must give the millions that it will so slightly miss. We want, among other things, five million or so for the erection of suitable dwelling houses for the missionaries, then another five million or so for a suitable mission office—my office, and about four or five millions for the protection of indigent canaries of Kooflestan. Ah! that's just the beginning. The great cause must not languish for want of a few paltry millions."

"You are returning soon?"
"Yes. Just as soon as I have recruited men and money for the great endeavor." His eyes lit with enthusiasm, then straying to a juicy stake nearby, lit some more. "The world is going to the dogs," said this eminent missionary in closing his fiery speech to the overjoyed students. "Everything is wrong. We are on the brink of a world wide catastrophe. No one believes in anything. Everyone is selfish. There is but one hope left for the world—but one hope for its salvation, which is more missionary—more missionaries—for Kooflestan."

GREEN IS BACK IN STORE

Clothing Man Buys Interest Sold Recently.

After having sold out his men's furnishings store at 713 Willamette street a month ago to J. B. Riddle and E. W. Merrill, R. Wayne Green announced Saturday he had decided to come back into the business and had purchased Mr. Riddle's interest in the store. The firm began operation today as the Green Merrell company.

Mr. Green says that after prospecting for business locations in other cities and considering the liberal patronage he has enjoyed here, together with the possibilities of a partnership with Mr. Merrill, he decided that the best opportunities were offered him in Eugene. By combining their resources and opportunities Mr. Green believes that he and Mr. Merrill will be able to build up a larger and better store.

CHAUTAUQUA WORK ATTRACTS.

Lois Hall and Ruth Lane intend to leave the University the first of April to do work on the Ellison-White Chautauqua circuit. Both girls were junior supervisors in this work last year and would be graduated in June if they continued their work here this term and next. This year they will travel through New Mexico, Arizona, California, Oregon, Washington, Idaho, Utah and Montana, and expect to be through the work by the middle of August.
