AN APPRECIATION.

The law library of the University is to be increased by some ten or twelve thousand volumes, the law collection of William Davis Fenton, a Portland attorney, given to the law school of the University as a memorial to Kenneth Lucas Fenton, a son who died a few years ago. The gift cannot be valued in terms of money; it might easily be called a priceless and invaluable addition to the law library of the state University.

The bequest is a collection which took Mr. Fenton two-score years to gather. No one ever will be able to express in words the deep appreciation which Oregon students feel towards the donor of this library. In refusing to allow the collection to be sold and scattered, Mr. Fenton has done a real service, which cannot fail to touch the hearts of the future lawyers of the state.

It is such gifts as this which cause Oregon students to hold such a feeling of pride in their University. Oregon students honor the friends of their University. Oregon has reached its present high plane because of these friends.

The law school of the University of Oregon can seek no better recommendation than that it was selected as the home of this collection. It is a gift which puts the law library a score of years ahead.

How is your vocabulary? Several freshman students of English composition offer some peculiar definitions for "big words" in our language. The disclosures are funny. But if you can do no better yourself, don't laugh!

With two more new buildings opened, the old cry of "cramped quarters" isn't heard so much any more.

SUMMER TERM POPULAR

Ten Per Cent of Regular Students Plan To Attend Session.

Approximately 10 per cent of the regular session students of the University will remain for the summer term, according to Dean Dymont. Of these it is estimated that one-third will register in the lower division, while two-thirds are expected to take advanced or graduate work.

"It is a good thing that regular students should stay for the summer term," said Dean Dymont. "Especially is it desirable that students in professional or pre-professional work should strengthen their foundations by this extra six weeks." He then explained that this session should be considered the first half of a fourth term, instead of an entirely separate summer session.

An invitation to become a member of the faculty of the summer term has been extended to a well-known professor of English literature in an eastern university, and a reply is expected within a few days.

SYRACUSAN WILL TEACH

Dr. H. A. Eaton, Head of English Literature, to be Hero Summer Term.

Horace A. Eaton, Ph. D., head of the department of English literature in Syracuse University, will give courses in the summer term, it is announced by Earl Kilpatrick, director of the extension division. Dr. Eaton will give three English literature courses here—Shakespeare and his contemporaries, Victorian poets, and modern drama.

Dr. Eaton is a good and interesting speaker, Mr. Kilpatrick says, and comes to Oregon highly recommended as a scholar and profound thinker, besides possessing a winning personality. Aside from his classes, Dr. Eaton will give from five to ten lectures before the daily assemblies.

Announcements

Student Council — Meeting tonight in Dr. Gilbert's room in the library; 7:30 o'clock.

Y. M. C. A. Courses — The extra-curriculum courses in Biblical literature, entitled "Masterpieces of Religious Literature" given the past term by Bruce J. Giffen, the student pastor, will be continued this term. The work will cover the Old Testament Prophets and the New Testament. The class will meet for the first lecture today at 11 o'clock at the Y. hut. Open to all students of the University. Two hours a week.

Doughnut Sports — Representatives of every campus organization for men are expected to appear at Coach Bohler's office tonight at 7:15 to discuss plans for doughnut baseball and track. Plans for the coming season will be outlined and officials chosen.

OREGANA WORK NOW NEARING COMPLETION

Forrest Littlefield New Manager; Editor Hopes to Have Book Out By Junior Week-End.

Forrest Littlefield has been appointed by the University executive committee to succeed Warren Kays as business manager of the Oregana. Kays has withdrawn from school.

"The work on the Oregana is going on rapidly and satisfactorily," said Graduate Manager McClain yesterday. "Everything is looking fine, and an especially good Oregana is promised."

Wanna McKinney, editor of the year-book, has received a sample of the cover design for the book, done in the colors which have been decided upon. "The cover is absolutely different from anything the Oregana has ever used," said Miss McKinney. "It is done in forest tones of green and brown with a touch of Oregon lemon-yellow. I consider it especially attractive," she went on. "It exceeds even my expectations."

The page borders, which Miss McKinney describes as "typically Oregon," are all printed, and the subject matter will be placed very soon. These page borders have been designed by the Oregana art staff, and according to the editor, they harmonize perfectly with the cover design.

Much of the composition matter is set up, the proof read and returned to Koke & Tiffany, Eugene, who are doing the printing. All pictures have been engraved with the exception of two or three art plates.

In the literary department of the book, will appear a short poem, "Looking Down On Oregon," by Miss Grace Edgington. In the opinion of the editors, this poem is one of the best things in the annual. Several of the routine departments have been condensed, said Miss McKinney, so as to allow more space for the other departments.

"The staff is endeavoring to get all copies of the book out for Junior Week-end," Miss McKinney said. "We hope everyone who has subscribed will be able to get his Oregana on May 20, 21 or 22."

NEW RESIDENCE HALL OPENED FOR WOMEN

of the porch to be open at night, and on damp days they can be closed.

Formal Opening This Month.

A feature of the new hall is the large recreation room directly beneath the drawing room. Here the basement has been fitted up with cozy chairs, a piano, rugs and shaded lights. A large fireplace, in cream tiles as is the one in the main drawing room, is at one end of the room. A hardwood floor will permit the girls to use the room for dancing and recreational purposes.

In the basement are situated the linen rooms, the laundry and drying rooms, and the trunk room. Everything is modern, and every possible convenience has been arranged for the girls.

The girls will have their dining room service at the Friendly hall cafeteria, with the exception of Miss Withycombe and a group of the girls, who will dine at Hendricks hall.

A formal opening of Susan Campbell hall is anticipated during the month of April. By that time the gardeners hope to have the lawns around the building seeded, the walks arranged, and the setting complete for the second addition to the University living quarters for women.

BRITISH SAID TO USE 'BARNACLES' IN EYES

Altruist Called Mountain Climber, and Trite a Kind of Fish, in Miss Edgington's Class.

Can you picture a well-groomed Englishman tacking down the Strand through the London fog with a barnacle in his eye? Undoubtedly he would experience rough sailing, but such a sight is a possibility because a pupil in Miss Edgington's English class has defined the word "barnacle" to mean an English eye-piece.

Words with similar sounds caused much difficulty in a vocabulary test given sometime ago by Miss Edgington. To judge from the definitions given to some of the words, Webster was entirely wrong when he compiled his volume of verbal information. For instance, an "altruist" is a mountain climber; larynx is a stone of somewhat precious nature; "trite" is a kind of a fish, or the lining of a cow's stomach; "lave" is Irish for leave, and an asterisk is an insect or a flower.

The word "barnacle" also has another meaning, one which savors a little more of salt water. Barnacle, proclaims one student — a wearer of the 1924 style campus sombrero—is a sailor's glass for observing distant objects. Likewise, the word "altruist" can be used effectively to make an ambiguous statement since it has several meanings. Besides being a mountain climber an altruist is also one who does not believe in future life.

Persons who peruse the literature of Blackstone might be interested to know that a clairvoyant is a lawyer; or if they are not satisfied with that definition of the word, farther down the list of errors tabulated by Miss Edgington, clairvoyant is interpreted as pertaining to lightness.

STUDENT DANCE FRIDAY

Womans' Building To Be Scene of First Frolic of Spring Term.

"Get your dates, boys, for Friday night's student body dance, to be held in the womans' building." So says John Houston, chairman of the student dance committee.

The dance will be the first to be held in the new building and if present plans of the committee are carried out it will be quite an event. An eight piece orchestra and a number of novel features are among the distinctive points in the committee plans.

Friday's affair will be the first dance of the spring term and will take the place of the usual open house program. The dance will start promptly at eight and the price of admission will be 50 cents.

CHAMBER WILL JOIN U. S. ORGANIZATION

The Organization Service Bureau is the repository of the most complete data with respect to organization methods. This information is distributed by the bureau through letters and the spoken word, to commercial organizations.

Years spent in studying the subject have qualified Mr. Brown to render expert advice with respect to activities that can successfully be undertaken, and those that should be avoided by business bodies.

Mr. Brown is known as an author of works on commercial organization. His publication, "Building and Maintaining a Local Chamber of Commerce," has been widely circulated. This work is principally for the community which has no commercial organization and is endeavoring to establish one. It is of great value, however, to communities seeking to reorganize their chambers and those desiring to study the most approved methods in organization structure and membership building.
