A FOOTBALL TRIP DE LUXE.

As the Hawaiian trip for the football team seems certain it might be well to consider what other members of the coast conference think of the post-season game. Here is what the University of Washington Daily has to say:

"The University of Oregon is assured of a phenomenal turnout for football next fall. Every Evergreen youth who has the strength to carry a pair of shoulder pads will be out on the gridiron. Nor will there be any lack of trainers, rubbers and assistant coaches—for the Oregon football is going to Hawaii next Christmas!

"While East-West games have excited considerable comment, the plans of the University of Oregon are probably unique in the history of the sport. By playing the University of Hawaii in Honolulu next Christmas, they will have taken a step more ambitious than attempted by any other college team. It will certainly be an interesting experiment.

"The element of time and expense will probably have some effect upon the venture, but the element of romance should more than offset these. When the Webfooters step from their chilly mudpuddle in Eugene to the shining shores of sunlit Hawaii, they should feel repaid for any sacrifice they have made.

"For those who are financially capable of standing the trip, the event should prove a gala social affair. The horse races at Longchamps will look like a lawn party as compared with the emigration of the elite to Waikiki. Never has the choice of a football contest been happier from the standpoint of outside attraction.

"Those who have never been to Hawaii may find difficulty in forecasting the effect of the trip upon the team, but if Hawaii has been accurately described in popular songs, the squad will carry three chaperones to every trainer."

One thing about the position of graduate manager: If an honest effort is made to seek the best possible man for the position, more students will be satisfied that the best man was obtained, no matter who is finally selected for the position.

WEIRD PROCESSIONS SEEK HAYWARD FIELD

Order of "O" Sends Green-Helmeted
Laborers To Work Under Boss "Bill."

Slowly, and with bent heads, each step seeming an effort, a gang of men is seen wending its way up University street, past the barracks, and across the buttercup meadow to Hayward field.

Are they the varsity athletes training for the coming track meets? Ah, no, for they lack the vim, the vigor, the pep, of training athletes. Perhaps it is a gang of chained convicts proceeding to their daily toil on the rockpile. Now you are guessing nearer the truth, but a close inspection shows a crown of green felt upon each head. But whoever saw convicts displaying old Ireland's color so promiscuously?

Ah! That clue solves the mystery. 'Tis but a group of drafted freshmen, who, because of an edict of the Order of the "O", and under the supervision

ADVERTISING CLASS TO WORK FOR PRIZES

Portland Agency Offers Two Problems for Solution.

The advertising agency of Botsford, Constantine and Tyler of Portland, has announced the offering of two prizes of $15, and $10 for the best solutions to a problem which they have presented in advertising. This offer is open to members of Professor Thacher's advertising class, and is the first of its kind to be offered here, although according to Professor Thacher, it will probably be made an annual affair.

We will assume that a large cannery the Oregon Packing company, wishes to advertise salmon. Hitherto their product has been sold under jobbers' brands and they do not have a brand name. What shall we call the salmon?

Decide upon a name and prepare two advertisements.

The first: A full page in colors to appear during March in the Ladies Home Journal, advertising the best grade Chinook which retails for 35 cents.

The second: An advertisement in a foreign language newspaper in New York. What size shall this ad be for good display and good position? Give the name of the paper which you think would be used or the nationality which represents the best market. This ad is to be Pink and Chum salmon, which retails at 20 and 15 cents. Write the ad in English, the paper makes the translation.

of "Bill" are helping to put Hayward field in shape for the coming tournaments.

And the results of their labor can well be measured by their industrious appearance. One day they will carry a half-dozen planks across the field, six or eight men to the plank. Next day a new gang, under a changed order, will carry the same planks back to their original resting place. The third day perhaps the frosh will take turns at lifting a shovel full of dirt out of a post hole. Perhaps, on the fourth day—But that's enough.

The field will surely be in readiness by Junior Week-end—that is, the Junior Week-end of which the class of 1924 is in the lime-light.

FORMER OREGON MAN WRITES FROM PARIS

Burle Bramhall Sees London Before Coming Home.

Earl Kilpatrick, director of the extension division, is again in receipt of a letter from Burle D. Bramhall, who has been with the Petrograd Children's colony for the past two years or more. During his absence Mr. Bramhall has corresponded with old friends on the Oregon campus, where he was at one time a student in the commerce department, and particularly has he kept Mr. Kilpatrick posted on the activities of the American Red Cross abroad.

In this last message, Mr. Bramhall makes no reference to the children's colony, and from that it is inferred that some sort of disposition was made of all the little children who had no parents to claim them.

After these many months of his absence from America, Mr. Bramhall is on his way home and the letter, extracts of which follow, is full of bits of Paris gossip, where he is visiting before setting out for England and, ultimately America.

"Arrived in Paris last Sunday. But as yet have had little opportunity to see the city. Our personal expense accounts were a little difficult to straighten out, since we used seven different currencies enroute, and added to that the cashier in particular, and the accounting force in general, are very slow." Mr. Bramhall's previous letter was written from Poland, and it was evidently from there that he and his other companions went to Paris.

The letter continues: "Have just returned from a tea d'ausant at the Frolics, where ten of us went this afternoon. There were two orchestras, one was American jazz, saxophone and all, and I enjoyed it very much. I can plainly see however, that I must take dancing lessons before returning home. Styles change.

"There is some possibility that we may go to London by airplane," continues

Mr. Bramhall in referring to their trip home: By the time this is printed he will have set sail from Europe, and will come to America via the southern route.
