TODAY.

Today the new Women's building is to be dedicated. To those who made the most imposing edifice on the Oregon campus possible, Oregon has set aside this day.

Perhaps to Mrs. Irene H. Gerlinger, more than any other person, is due the credit for the Women's building. To her all homage is due. As a member of the Board of Regents of the University, but most of all as a woman, Mrs. Gerlinger realized the need for such a structure on the Oregon campus, and her successful efforts to gather contributions among friends throughout the state is responsible for the completed building which will be dedicated today.

To the generous press of the state, who co-operated with the fund for the building by giving unrewardable advertising to the cause, to the legislatures of 1919, 1920 and 1921, who contributed generously to the fund by appropriations, to the taxpayers of the state who made these appropriations possible, and, above all, to the countless friends, students and alumni of the University who made the building possible by contributions large and small, this day is dedicated.

"To do something definite for the women students of the University of Oregon," was the commission given to Mrs. Gerlinger seven years ago by Oswald West, then governor of Oregon. The Women's building stands today as the "definite something" which Mrs. Gerlinger, through her efforts, has made possible.

Yesterday the varsity looked like a real baseball team. Beating the Sun Dodgers is something to boast about. Bohler seems to have at last found a combination that knows baseball and can play it. Now let's make a fight for victories.

Tomorrow is Mothers' Day all over the country, and the University is to be hosts to many of them today. The mothers are our best friends. The best is none too good for them.

SEABECK LUNCHEONS ARE GIVEN REGULARLY

Men Intending to Attend Conference
Meet at Y. M. C. A. Hut For Short Talks.

A series of luncheons are being held at the Y. M. C. A. hut this week by the men who are considering making the trip to the annual student conference for the northwest at Seabeck, Washington, which which is to be held immediately after school is out.

Yesterday noon some 15 men met and listened to talks by some of the men who had before attended a convention.

According to Owen Callaway, president of the association, Oregon will send 30 men, if the present goal is attained. It is the purpose to have as many men as possible sign up this week.

The different schools represented will include University of Washington, Washington State College, Oregon Agricultural College, University of Idaho, as well as practically all of the smaller colleges in the states of Oregon, Washington and Idaho.

The program is divided into educational and athletic departments. Speakers from all parts of the west have been asked to speak and there will be athletics between the different colleges represented. Seabeck is located on a branch of Puget Sound and the men always have the advantages of salt water breezes and swimming.

Last year there were over 300 delegates at the conference.

FORMER STUDENT VISITS.

Miss Dolly Hodges, of Prineville, associate editor of the Prineville Call, dropped in at the school of journalism yesterday. Miss Hodges was formerly a student in journalism here. She accompanied her mother, Mrs. L. M. Hodges, to Eugene. Mrs. Hodges will spend two months visiting her sisters, Misses May and Margaret Baldwin, in this city.

UNIVERSITY CAMPUS USED AS PLAYGROUND

Class Under Miss Conklin Demonstrates
Ability With Practical Work With Children.

A temporary children's playground was installed on the campus west of Villard last Saturday afternoon from 12 to 4 o'clock when about 350 children frolicked, played all manner of games, from baseball to blindman's buff, ate candy and nuts, and, apparently, from the sound of the squeals and laughter, had a joyful, happy time.

The children were in charge of Miss Gladys Conklin's class in playground supervision, which is composed of junior girls in the physical education department. The youngsters were divided into groups, and while the younger children played circle games, the older ones played baseball and volleyball.

The girls in charge were: Echo Baldersee, Emma Garbade, Lois Barnett, Geneva Stebno, Alice Evans, Elsie Hildebrand, Florence Furuset, Margaret Russell, Grace Tigard and Myrtle Margerle.

VISIT ENDS IN WEDDING

Eva Rice and Chauncey Markee Married in Vancouver, Wash.

When Miss Eva Rice went to Portland last Friday for a week-end visit, both she and her sisters expected her to be in Eugene again on Tuesday, but not so, for a telegram was received Monday evening at the Sigma Delta Phi house announcing the marriage of Miss Rice to Chauncey Markee, of Portland. The marriage took place Monday afternoon at Vancouver, Washington. Mrs. Markee is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. M. E. Rice, of Roseburg. She is a member of the sophomore class and of Sigma Delta Phi.

The couple expect to make their home in Portland, where Mr. Markee is a student at the Portland Dental college.

The Campus Cynic

GREAT MAN INTERVIEWED.

Burning Speech Delivered By Candidate
Whoosus! Evils of School System
Mercilessly Scored.

Editor: (Exclusive interview granted to Emerald representative. This is the only authentic statement made by Whoosus for publication, which shows that the Emerald is foremost in gathering news of importance.)

I managed to see Whoosus today. Seeing Whoosus is about as hard a job as putting a crease in a pair of tweed pants. The thing is seldom done. I went to the great man's office and found his campaign manager munching pretzels and read that great political dope sheet, "Uncle Harry's Dud."

"I'm from the Emerald," I wheezed after climbing the three flights of stairs. "And I represent two thousand eager, expectant souls who desire to know something about Whoosus, everything about Whoosus, the veriest details about Whoosus, from dandruff to tubular shoe laces."

"Candidate Whoosus is out," said the campaign manager, with a knowing leer. "Out of what?" asks I. "Nit," returns the C. M., "don't get funny. He's on the trail of political boss E. Normus Pull, who controls the vote of the denizens of certain groups, who live in clans, and houses."

I rushed out and careened wildly down the boulevard after Whoosus, who was after boss Pull, who in turn was after something to eat. The race was long and strenuous. Finally I brought up in front of a cafe and saw Whoosus and Pull seated inside, in a fair corner, whispering furtively to each other. I hurried over to them. "I," I gasped in short pants, "am from the Emerald and I want information. Now, first of all, Mr. Whoosus, what was your father's middle initial?" "I have nothing to say for publication," said Whoosus, drawing himself up haughtily. "Thanks," says I taking down the facts. "The people want to know just such human interest stuff about the great men who are before the public today. Now Mr. Whoosus is it true that six times three, divided by four, plus the coefficient of Underwood's phony in minor would equal the square on the hypotenuse of Einstein's theory?"

"Undoubtedly," returned Whoosus, warming to his subject and stirring his coffee vigorously with a pie fork. "Delightful human qualities," I murmured ecstatically, making a note of it. "Now Mr. Whoosus, just what is your opinion of professors?" "Careful," interrupted Pull, "remember you are talking for publication."

"If elected," commenced Whoosus, in a deep sonorous voice, resembling nothing so much as a truck horse sneezing—"Careful," adjures Pull once more. "If elected," continues the candidate, "I would to the best of my ability perform the duties inherent in the office. I am deeply sensible of the great honor conferred on me thus far. There is a crying need for men of high caliber, who have the ability to labor diligently, who have personalities that will lead the school to glory and rectitude." Whoosus stopped suddenly, moved by his emotions. "Of course, I am not saying I possess these qualifications in the highest degree—yet I firmly believe," he added generously, "that I more fully understand the problems of the office, and am more able to cope with them than any other man in the field. Not out of egotism do I say this, but only after a long and impartial survey of my own nature."

"What do you think your chances are for election?" I inquired meekly.

"We will be swept into office by an overwhelming majority," he stoutly asserted. "Yes, you may quote me as saying it will be a walk-away."

E. Normus Pull looked at me severely and gulped down a vicious thimbleful of lemon coke. He is a bad, bold man, this political boss, who holds in his hands the destinies of so many candidates. It is rumored that he expects to swing the election by the combined fifty votes of two prominent organizations on the campus.
