

More than four thousand students are now enrolled in all departments of the University of Oregon. More than a half million dollars' worth of new buildings have been completed this year. Several men and women of national reputation have been added to the faculty. The books in the library have passed the hundred thousand mark. A strong graduate school has been organized, so that it is no longer necessary to go outside the state to secure a doctor's degree.

A degree from the University of Oregon is a passport to many opportunities, because back of it is a training wide and thorough. For forty-three years University of Oregon graduates have been going out into the world to perform honorably the tasks of citizenship, to take their places in the trades and professions, and to win by reason of their training success and eminent position.

Tuition is free and expenses low. You can wear old clothes and be thought just as much of. Two-thirds of the students are wholly or partly self-supporting. Young men and women are judged on the basis of their serious worth and endeavor—on what they attain by their own efforts and strive to attain. Leadership is open alike to all.

Four serious but pleasant years spent at this democratic University will bring inestimable returns that will grow and accumulate through life. It is maintained by the State in order that you may not be denied the advantages of an education that will equip you fully to meet the competitions of a busy world.

You can get training for nearly all the professions at the University of Oregon. When you have satisfied its high requirements for a degree, you are ready to take a definite and profitable place in the field of work you have chosen.
