TWO THOUSAND BEHIND THEM!

"TEAR," shouted Brick Mitchell and his determined jaws came together with a click.

Oregon's ponderous football machine moved forward like an avalanche. Then they broke away from the huge moving mass and individually they circled out and came back to take their regular positions as a part of that machine.

A scalding stream of sarcasm was their reward, for they were told that they were slow. That they lacked any indications of ever becoming a football eleven. That they couldn't beat a high school football team. Shy Huntington looked at them in disgust.

The eleven men stood still, listened, and look their coach in the eye as he spoke. They didn't hang their heads; they were not cowed. They were determined in their hearts to "tear" the next time their coach shouted the significant little word at them, and they did!

No man ever worked harder than those eleven men on that machine work, and they are working for the thing that every Oregon student is silently praying for. Oregon must win and Oregon fight will enable Oregon to win.

Oregon faces the hardest football schedule in its history this fall. The schedule opens tomorrow at Salem and will continue until January 2, when the Varsity will have played nine games.

The outcome of those games is a matter of speculation. But whatever the outcome Oregon Fight never dies.

Every student goes to Salem with that team tomorrow in its first test of the season. They may not go in person but they go in spirit.

Two thousand students are behind that team!

VILLARD Hall was crowded to overflowing yesterday at the first assembly and both the old and the new members of the student body started right. The proper programs for assemblies must be presented this year. Punctuality on the part of the students in getting to the gathering, and on the part of those in charge in not keeping the programs running over time will both assist in keeping the students going right on the matter of attending the Thursday morning meetings.

THE Frosh received their first lesson in Oregon traditions yesterday. They performed nobly and with a little specialized instruction in individual cases as their period of infancy goes on, we predict they will soon become thoroughly acquainted with all the campus traditions. The personal touch will aid.

MUSE AROUSED BY CROOKED PATHWAYS

Oh thou incomplete mosaic—
Thou truncated tessellation
Of ways that lead nowhere!
Must ye long remain to vex the vagrant
feet
Of those that knowledge seek?
Must ye linger still to mark the way
Of ancient and forgotten paths?
Is there none to rectify
Thy wry and crooked ugliness?
Bastard pathways!
Abortive pavements
Yet

How like the ways of man thou art—
Straightlyconceived—Unconsummated before their purpose is achieved!

Scotched thoroughfares!
Askew and misbegotten parquetry!
Oh, hateful miscellany of sidewalks!

OLD MUSIC BUILDING GIVES OUT NEW SOUNDS

Shining Apparatus of Embryonic Cooks
Replace Instruments of Musician

Dazzlingly white woodwork and furniture, shining gas-stoves, sinks, refrigerators, and all the other domestic paraphernalia, are rapidly transforming the large classroom on the first floor of the erstwhile music building into a model kitchen.

The musical whirr of eggbeaters and the deep drone of the meat-grinder will soon take the place of the tinkle of piano and the tune of violin. There will be no place for temperament in the new order of things; but Miss Tingle's proteges will have to know quite a lot about the temperature of ovens and the boiling point of sugar.

The paint on the woodwork is still decidedly wet, as was proved yesterday afternoon by the touch method. The painters say, however, that if the plumbers will only hurry up, the room will be ready for use in a short time. The devotees of the dishpan will be on the job, then, before very long.

TIN ANNEX IS MOVED

Extension Division Takes Everything Along on Moving Day

When the extension division moved its desks, books, papers and personnel from Oregon hall to the old music building it placed its cast iron annex on a wagon and took it along as well.

Many students doubtless wondered where the small building of sheet metal construction was going as they saw it hauled up Thirteenth avenue on a ponderous wagon. If any were curious enough to follow it through they would have seen it unload beside the old music building where it is to be located as permanently as the extension division.

The cause for the existence of the structure is that fire insurance regulations prohibit the storage of motion picture films in an ordinary building. The extension division possesses many thousand feet of film used in its work throughout the state and a small fire-proof storehouse is necessary to keep it in. The building was formerly between Oregon hall and Kincaid street.

CORRESPONDENCE STUDY PRAISED BY PRESIDENT

University Education Open Through Home Work

"There is practically no limit to the education the people of this state can give themselves through correspondence study," said President P. L. Campbell at a meeting of the faculty of the correspondence study department of the extension division Wednesday evening.

In the past, President Campbell said further, a university education was open only to a relatively few, and those usually young and immature. Now, through home study, mature men and women may educate themselves while carrying on their daily work.

Commenting on the steady growth of the extension division, President Campbell expressed the belief that the time would come soon when it would be necessary and desirable for the division to have a building of its own, with a corps of instructors devoting their whole time to correspondence study. The extension division, he declared, is playing a very important part in bringing the people of the state into direct touch with the University and increasing their interest in it. He said he believed that before long there would be a demand on the part of the people for even more and better service than they are now getting.

There are now 993 course registrations in correspondence study, according to Earl Kilpatrick, director, who gave a brief resume of the history of the division. Mr. Kilpatrick also spoke briefly on some of the problems confronting the correspondence instructor, and asked the instructors' cooperation in helping solve them.

It is planned to hold faculty meetings of the correspondence department regularly during the year, at which the special problems of the division will be discussed.
