The Best Is Not Too Good

The "Y" has set before itself a goal which leaves it up to every man in the University, whether the best is too good for Oregon or not. A campaign in which the active members of the organization are busily engaged is now being carried on to secure for the campus hut one of the leading secretaries in the country.

The Emerald does not uphold the "Y" as having been a model organization in the past, but it does see in this movement, the probability that mistakes will not be made in the future. It is again Oregon's chance to take the lead.

There are many things to be considered in getting behind the "Y" in this matter. The organization maintains an employment bureau for the students, it maintains a club room where the men who do not reside in the various living organizations can gather, it affords a place where the men can drop in and spend a few hours of recreation, it assists in procuring qualified speakers for assemblies.

The point to be taken into consideration is not the mistakes that the "Y" has made, but to put the shoulder to the wheel and make it the "Y" of the future. Every man will be asked to contribute, and there will be value received for every contribution.

Start the Ball Rolling

Oregon's opportunity to stage the biggest homecoming in the history of the institution will come this year. With the Oregon Aggies and the Varsity opposing each other on the gridiron, this means that Oregon does not play host to Oregon alumni alone, but to the entire State of Oregon.

Alumni students of the University of Oregon and the Oregon Agricultural College will be gathered at Eugene and on the University of Oregon campus for the gala event. This is our chance to make good and to show to the former students of our rival institution, one of the biggest and best homecoming affairs ever staged.

Preparation has begun and already committees are busily engaged working out the preliminary details. One of these committees has for its task the selection of a suitable slogan for the affair. As an incentive they have offered to the successful competitor the choice of selecting two of the best seats in the grandstand for the big game.

A suitable slogan,—short, snappy, to the point, full of action and typifying the significance of the occasion, is a necessary detail. Let's get together and get a slogan first, then let's take up the next task. There will be many.
