Higher Standards for Athletics.

The suggestion of the Dean of the School of Physical Education for a director of athletics at Oregon may be the solution of a problem which has long been faced here. At least it will provide us with considerable food for thought. The situation here is far from perfect at present; there is no use in dodging that as an issue.

Continued friction between coaches is apparent. There is dissatisfaction among Oregon alumni and former students throughout the State over the system as it now exists. It may take time to bring about a change, it may even sound idealistic to some, but the fact remains nevertheless that some sort of solution must be reached. Then a united alumni and student body must be behind the decision.

Many of the students will assent readily to the plan of a director of athletics who will have charge of all coaches, and the plan for the University to pay the salaries of all such coaches and the director. Such a plan would surely relieve the associated students from a heavy expense which it is necessary for them to meet each year. Illinois and Chicago have such a system and it works successfully.

On the other hand, the University administration will undoubtedly reply that they cannot afford to take up this additional expense at such a time. But would it be such an added expense? Would there not be a sufficient increase in the amount of good work which such a system could do for the University throughout the State to more than offset the added expense?

At least there should be an executive in Oregon's athletic department who will assume the responsibility for the entire department. Then and then only, will there be complete harmony between coaches and trainers. And the suggestion for a director of athletics, who would become a member of the faculty, should bring about a closer cooperation between the faculty and the athletic department. They are necessary to each other and to the school.

Irresponsible students who deliberately deface and destroy books which are loaned to them by the University library should be dealt with severely. Using the property of the University in such a manner is rather a detestable thing to do and more especially so when there are other students who have to depend upon the same text book to get their assignments.

Canoes and the mill race will hardly be on speaking terms Sunday nights, if the proposed plan for the elimination of dates on that evening is adopted by the coeds. A sudden slump in the canoe market may be looked for in that case.

TOTAL ENROLLMENT IN EXTENSION DIVISION 853

Two Students in China; Almost All States Represented

TWO THIRDS ARE TEACHERS

College Paper Published For Correspondence Workers

Eight hundred and fifty-three students are enrolled in the extension division of the University, according to statistics issued by that office for the month ending November 1. All over Oregon and in nearly all the states of the Union are students doing University of Oregon work, and there are two persons in China and one on the high seas—or rather, the Pacific—enrolled in this division of the University.

The extension division has 76 different courses, including work in science, education, commerce, English, mathematics, languages, architecture, and history. The division has sent out in all 1028 study courses to the total number of 853 extension students.

Courses Open Throughout Year
During the month of October 98 students enrolled. Seventy-four of these were new students, 24 of them persons who had taken correspondence work before and enrolled in new courses. Twenty-four students completed courses in October. One may enroll in the correspondence school at any time, so that courses are constantly commenced or completed.

Out of the total number of students now enrolled in this work, nearly 600 are teachers. The largest number of registrations is in the education courses; next largest is the enrollment in English work, and then comes the registration in art and history.

Entrance courses, whereby students may complete University entrance credits, include 18 different courses. One hundred and thirty-eight entrance courses have been sent out.

Former Minister Studies
In Singapore, one of Oregon's students, is taking courses in algebra and geometry by correspondence. His name is Abel Elklund; he was formerly a minister in Portland, and is doing missionary work at present. Mr. Elklund has been traveling all over Europe, doing University work in the meantime.

Courses in English and in modern history are going from the University to Kihnsien, Honan, China, where A. L. Grinnell, formerly of Seattle, is engaged in educational work.

On the tug Sea Lion, plying up and down the Pacific Coast, radio-operator Elmer G. Osterhoudt is doing University work in botany and physiology. Mr. Osterhoudt is a graduate of the Eugene high school. His home station is San Francisco, and he gets his mail there, but he writes that he experiences some difficulty in the matter of collecting botany specimens.

Students may take 60 hours of correspondence courses to apply toward graduation. They may take as many courses as they like, but only this number may be used toward the gaining of a University degree.

The Extension Monitor is published by the division for the benefit of extension students of the University of Oregon, and is furnished free to all who register. It is the college paper of all these outside students, and is planned for the purpose of making them feel that they really belong to the University, and of telling them what the other students are doing.

Correspondence Work Enjoyed

"All of the really serious students like the extension work very much," said Dr. D. E. Clark, director of the division, in discussing the correspondence study. "Many say that they get as much out of correspondence courses as they would out of classroom courses here, because in the correspondence courses the student recites the whole lesson, and not only a part of it."

The same grading system is used for correspondence courses as that used in the classes on the campus.

SOPH INFORMAL FRIDAY

Student Body to Dance Gratis at Armory; Quartet to Feature

The new armory is being dressed with great care by the committee on decorations for the Annual Sophomore Informal, which is an event of next Friday evening. Streamers and evergreens are being used to give the hall a canopy effect, while colored lights will be used to add warmth and coziness.

A seven piece orchestra will furnish the harmony for the large body of dancers. There will be refreshments although just what form these will take is not known. The sophomore quartet will furnish the feature number. The dance is free to the student body and no one should stay at home. Dancing will start at 8:30. The place is the armory, the time Friday night, you get the date and the sophomore class will see that you have a good time.

PLAN SUGGESTED FOR ELECTION OF ATHLETIC DIRECTOR

Bill Hayward, trainer and track coach receives a salary of $4,500, and of this amount the University pays $2750 with the associated students paying the remaining amount. Charles A. Huntington, head coach of football receives $4,000, and $1500 of this is paid by the University the remainder coming from the student body treasury. George Bohler, head coach of basketball and baseball is paid entirely by the University.

The plan for an athletic director at Oregon has been gaining strength of late and the many students and alumni supporters of such a plan are in hopes that it may be accomplished soon.
