Coaches In Harmony

The three head coaches of major sports at Oregon emphatically denied yesterday that there was any friction between them in the athletic department here. Shy Huntington, Bill Hayward and George Bohler, each a head coach of a major sport, scouted the statement that "friction was apparent" as it was made in The Emerald yesterday in an editorial advocating a director of athletics here.

If this rumor is false then The Emerald is only too glad to hear it. There should be no friction, the success of Oregon athletic teams would be seriously hampered if such were the case. But, nevertheless the rumor has persisted, and if bringing the matter to the front as The Emerald has, will check further rumors to this effect, then much good will have been accomplished.

The Emerald believes in frank and straightforward discussion of such matters. The students should know the facts in every case, and if persistent rumors are being carried without foundation then a plain statement of the facts should be made. Too often, remarks made by those in authority are misinterpreted and complete misrepresentation results.

The coaches in their denial of this rumor, declare that this might have been the case, and that if stories were carried out to the effect that there was friction, they might unknowingly have let a remark drop which was misinterpreted. The fact remains, that such a rumor was persistent, but such an emphatic denial by the head coaches will probably obviate its recurrence.

With this issue The Emerald introduces to its readers a new feature. The excellent news service which has characterized the work of the Pacific Intercollegiate Press Association since its existence, will hereafter be made a prominent feature of the service which the Emerald will render to its readers. Of course, it is in the experimental stage for the time being. If it is received favorably it will undoubtedly be continued throughout the college year.

Zion City will have little on Oregon, when it comes to "blue laws" if the one now pending goes through here. There is nothing like "tightening the cinch," is the idea of some people.
