The Crow's Nest

By CARNY

There are nine and sixty ways of composing tribal lays, And every single one of them is right.

If the author of that impressive half-truth could behold the profanation of poetry which appeared in yesterday's Emerald over the signature of E. J. H., he'd change his mind with vigorous unanimity.

As might be expected, E. J. H. shows just enough of education to misquote Noah Webster and me and other romanticists. With an assortment of vacuous, auctorial phrases, which are the common property of the rabble and of the proletariat, he proceeds to condemn what he cannot understand.

The other day I published a feeble, decrepit bit of levity concerning the status of the R. O. T. C. It was one of those selections of insipid, archaic humor of the type that gives vent to the arid, cackling laughter that rasps in the wake of the average Y. M. C. A. joke.

Now that I have jarred the Cynic from his kurdaitchas (if he doesn't know what these are, I might explain that they are shoes shaped so that one cannot tell in which direction the wearer has gone), he has admitted that he is a candidate for something.

Now he has announced his chameleon platform. Like most platforms, it is garlanded with golden pomegranates, verbosity, and utter rot—to be blown willy-nilly by the first breeze of opposition.

To make the wearing of golf sox on the campus punishable by hanging, or such penalty as a court martial may direct.

To banish to Siberia or O. A. C., all candidates who go about shaking hands before election time.

This, then, is my platform. I am saving my other planks in order to avoid stumbling over them in my pursuit of votes. That is the conventional way of doing business.

One team everybody can make

AFTER the big game, if you don't need a box of voice lozenges there's something wrong. A hoarse voice is evidence that you were covering your position on the bleachers.

The harder the game the harder it ought to be to talk afterwards. Your "Ataboy" and "Line it out" buck up a fagged nine—and so your shouts give you the right to rejoice in the victory, because they helped win it.

This spectacle of a grandstand full of men fighting for their team is one aspect of a very splendid sentiment—college spirit.

When you show college spirit you are doing a fine thing for your college, a fine thing for the men around you, but a finer thing for yourself.

The same spirit which keeps you cheering through a rainy afternoon will in after life keep you up all night to put through a rush job for the boss.

The same spirit which makes you stand by your teams through thick and thin will find you loyal to your shop or office, always ready with a shoulder to the wheel—even if it isn't your own particular wheel—giving suggestion and active help and a word of good cheer, once again earning your right to rejoice in the victory.

In business in college make it a good, snappy "Yea, team!"

The Virtue of Being Far-Sighted

Oregon has not attempted such drastic action as might be considered expedient in many cases where traditions have been wantonly violated by students. At other institutions widely known and loved for their traditions which have formed a sacred bond of loyalty among the students and alumni, these same traditions have been preserved at all costs.

The Daily Illini, commenting on a case of tradition violations recently, says: "Illinois does not stand alone in her careful protection of traditions. While lawyers are advocating their exclusive right to carry senior canes, Michigan comes forward with an even more drastic action to insure the wearing of freshman spots.

The agitation to cast aside forever the hazing activities which swept over the colleges and universities of the country a few years ago has evidently failed if it has proposed a method to keep the observance of traditions sacred. There must never be a return to hazing methods in spite of this, for although effective in imbuing the freshman with a spirit of do or die, they did not stand on the firm foundation desirable for the best results.

But tradition violators must be punished. An apparent disregard for traditions means the first step in a course which will mean the complete breaking down of an "esprit de corps" which has given Oregon a name throughout the world of college and university life. Disgruntled individuals who have seized upon an opportunity to destroy traditions must be taught to recognize the value of preserving all that we now have.

Oregon has not outgrown its traditions, for to outgrow them is to lose every vestige of all that we now hold dear. No subterfuge should be countenanced where the questions of traditions are at stake. They are the vitality of the spirit of this University, and no effort must be spared to preserve them. Where groups would destroy them, they must be censured and shown the narrowness of their vision, their inability to foresee the future of the spirit of a great University.

A Word in Time

The Emerald has said that there can surely be no issues in a campus political campaign which will not stand the light of publicity. It stands firmly behind this statement and if any unworthy issues should creep in then the full light of this publicity will be thrown upon them.

The heat of a political campaign cannot destroy the first duty of loyalty to the University. This loyalty must always be kept uppermost and the future as well as the present considered. The students are the custodians of the reputation of the University, and as such must share the adverse criticism as well as the praise,—and keep always at heart, a full realization of the responsibility imposed in them.

When the smoke of the political battle has cleared somewhat, the "lame duck club" suggested for the defeated candidates should do much toward the hasty forgetting of political enmity and promoting good fellowships. There is no place on this campus for election feuds, and the organization suggested will do much to keep them out.

FOREIGN STUDENTS GUESTS

Party Will Be Given at Y. M. C. A. Hut Tomorrow Evening

All foreign students of the University will be entertained at a party at the Y. M. C. A. Hut Friday night, May 5. The program includes several musical numbers, games, eats, and a few reels of motion pictures.

ises to be one of the features of the evening.

These parties for foreign students have held quite a large place in the Y. M. C. A. program this year. Several of them have been held, all of which have been very successful. They not only give the foreign students amusement and make them acquainted with each other, but also an opportunity to become more familiar with our language and customs.
