And to Bid Adieu

Mingled expressions of joy and sadness usually characterize the final written word of the editor who completes his year of service to the associated students of this great University, and in writing this message of farewell your editor of the past year is making no exception to this rule. He regrets the passing of valued associations but is glad to look back on a year of most pleasant relations both with staff and student body, and on a record of continued effort for the good of the institution.

Each morning during the college year, now swiftly drawing to a close, the students, faculty members and friends of the University have noted in these columns the heralding of campus events. The task of presenting to a critical University community, such as this, an opinion in the editorial columns which would not be criticized is an insurmountable one. The editor whom you as students chose to voice his opinion on the vital issue of University life has not been unmindful of this critical process which goes on day by day. And to meet it, his opinions have not been arrived at without great care; the arguments on the one side and then on the other have been weighed and analyzed, and an honest attempt made to meet the issue fearlessly and truthfully.

To tabulate the accomplishments of The Emerald at such a time as this would be futile. The sense of creation which has crept over the editor and staff as they have read each issue in minute detail can never be felt by those who have not faced the special trials and tribulations of the daily newspaperman. The Emerald, through the individual and collective efforts of its staff, to which the editor passes on with whole-hearted approval whatever notes of appreciation have reached his desk, has been born a live and vital organism on this campus daily.

To repeat what has previously appeared in this column, "The Emerald has scrupulously tried to keep its skirts out of the mud, to remain aloof from clique, from party, from outside individual influence. Its policies are the expression of its editor and its board of editors, and arise from a whole-hearted desire to do their conception of the right thing ever and always. These policies are not intended as an absolute expression of campus opinion. They are intended, and as such have been kept, as the honest expression of those whom you have chosen to run the paper."

With this parting word the editor turns to other fields, wherein he may continue his attempt to work out the best teachings of the profession of journalism.

FLOYD MAXWELL.

A Fitting Example

The senior class, by their action in adopting the plan of an endowment of $10,000 to be made to the University at the end of a ten-year period, has set a very worthy example and one which may be the beginning of an organized system of awards which will mean an annual income of several thousand dollars to the institution. Oregon has long been trailing behind in the matter of endowments and gifts from its alumni, and the graduating class this year has evidently set upon the very course which will enable the University to receive a small portion of the returns which are warranted in compensation for the service it has rendered.

Of course, such a plan to be successful must receive the whole-hearted support of all the members of the class, and this it should easily do. By a payment of less than 50 cents each month of the year for ten years, an endowment of more than $10,000 will be possible. The satisfaction in giving, of which each member of the class will partake individually, should have far greater significance to all than would be afforded by a gift from the class treasury, necessarily much smaller. And to be the pioneer in establishing a tradition for endowments will be a credit indeed to the class of 1922.

CHI OMEGA GIVES AWARD GRADUATE WORK OFFERED

Hallie Smith, Sociology Major, Wins $25; Money Given to Needy

Hallie Smith, of Dallas, a junior in the school of sociology, was awarded the 1921-22 Chi Omega prize of $25 for the best student in the department, according to an announcement made yesterday. In making the award scholarship, personality and the activities of the student are taken into consideration.

Because Miss Smith is herself a Chi Omega, she has given the money to Mrs. M. S. Ady, police matron, who will use it in buying food and clothing for needy children in Eugene.

Miss Smith has been president of Chi Omega, secretary and acting president of Pan-Hellenic council, vice-president of the junior class, and was recently elected senior woman on the student council.

Psychology Majors May Take Summer Courses Toward Degrees

An opportunity for graduate work toward a master's degree is offered University summer school students in Dr. H. R. Crosland's course in genetic interpretation of psychology, which corresponds to his regular course in adolescence.

Doctor Conklin says that graduate students will find the course in research and thesis invaluable in preparing the theses for their master's degrees.

MANY BOOKS ISSUED

The library reports that during the first four months of 1922 a total of 99,250 volumes were issued at the circulation and reserve book desks. This is an increase of 40 per cent over the number issued during the first four months of 1921.

A Gateway to Progress

There it stands—a simple forty-foot gateway* but unlike any other in the entire world. Through it have come many of the engineering ideas that have made this an electrical America.

The story of electrical development begins in the Research Laboratories. Here the ruling spirit is one of knowledge—truth—rather than immediate practical results. In this manner are established new theories—tools for future use—which sooner or later find ready application.

The great industries that cluster around Niagara Falls, the electrically driven battleships, the trolley cars and electrified railways that carry millions, the lamps that glow in homes and streets, the household conveniences that have relieved women of drudgery, the labor-saving electrical tools of factories, all owe their existence, partly at least, to the co-ordinated efforts of the thousands who daily stream through this gateway.
