EXTENSION DIVISION IS LARGER AT PORTLAND

Program More Varied and Extensive Than Before

The largest curriculum since the establishment of the extension division will be offered this fall at the Portland center of the University of Oregon. According to Director Earl Kirkpatrick, there will be 83 courses, which will be taught by 52 instructors, 10 more than composed last year's faculty. With few exceptions classes will be held in the Lincoln high school during the evenings.

Courses will be offered in the college of literature, science and the arts, the graduate school, and the schools of architecture and allied arts, business administration, education, medicine and music.

Three years' programs of work have also been inaugurated this year in arts and crafts, accounting, advertising, American citizenship and public speaking. A special certificate from the University will be granted each student who successfully completes the course. Certificates will also be granted to students who complete the public health nursing course. These certificates are offered in order to encourage the student to continue his studies over a period of time sufficient for greater mastery than is possible in one year.

The language work of the Center has been materially strengthened by the offering of six new languages in the curriculum. They are Greek, Hebrew, Swedish, Danish-Norwegian, Russian and German. Those taking business administration are expected to be interested in these courses in connection with the study of foreign trade.

More than 3,000 students were enrolled in extension work at the Portland center last year.
