Naming Our Teams

Oregon's athletic teams should have a distinctive name, such as practically all colleges have adopted, but the trouble seems to be in finding one which is both original and appropriate. How much easier it is for the Californians to refer to their teams as the "Bears," rather than the California varsity; for the students at Washington to use the term "Vikings."

The matter has come up before, but nothing has ever been done due to the lack of appropriate suggestions. The Emerald believes that if some competitive means were offered, an expression which would be generally acclaimed would be turned in. The University has grown accustomed to merely using the expression, "The Oregon Team," which fails to fill the need. Calling the teams which represent us "the lemon-yellow" is all very well, but it does not go far enough. What we need is something short and snappy which will suggest desirable qualities in varsity teams.

If we fail to provide a name for ourselves sports writers of rival schools are likely to give us a name which will stick. Already the colleges of the University have been confused with the name of the teams, due to the lack of any other. An appropriate suggestion would be invaluable to the yell staff and to the sports writers, but the big advantage would be in advertising athletic activities in the state.

The problem is to find a suitable name. Let's hear some suggestions!

Honor for the Yell King

The Yell King is one of the most important men on the Oregon campus, and the steps which are being taken to give the office more prestige are in the right direction. Upperclassmen only should be eligible for the yell staff, since the chief duty of the Yell King is to direct Oregon Spirit, which underclassmen have not yet had sufficient opportunity to absorb.

The system which has been worked out by Rosebraugh, Keeney, and Oberteuffer will provide us with an effective staff this year and will help to insure against a repetition of the incident before the Multnomah game. The freshmen who tried out are to be commended for their enthusiasm, but those who should have been out were members of the other classes. Arrangements for tryouts for assistants are to be made during the year, and when the time is announced there should be a number of upperclassmen from whom to make the selection.

The annual drive of the Y. M. C. A. and the Y. W. C. A. for funds is on. Those who have received direct benefits through the campus associations should not have to be urged to give. And every student has received indirect benefits. The University could not get along without the two organizations. Generous giving is necessary to make the drive a success and to provide enough money for another year.

The new student who fails to attend the lectures by MacGregor and Oberteuffer tonight is missing a real opportunity. "Student Activities" and "Oregon Traditions" are the subjects. They will help you to become a better Oregon student.

military life and went to British Columbia where, within three years, he amassed a fairly large fortune.

World War Summons

Then came the eventful August 4, 1914. With the sound of the bugle and the measured tread of marching feet the spirit of the warrior again broke into flame, and Colonel Leader immediately hastened back to England where he became a captain in the intelligence department of the general headquarters staff.

Within a very short time he was promoted to major, and in October, 1914, he was commissioned a colonel and was placed in command of the 16th Royal Irish Rifles with whom he served gallantly through many of the most bloody engagements of the war. Later he was connected with the Ulster division, which on July 1, 1916, made one of the greatest charges during the entire war in which all but 17 of its 232 commissioned officers were either killed or wounded.

On August 9, 1916, while the Colonel was in his dugout, it was struck by a shell. The Colonel was struck thirteen times by flying metal, but despite his wounds he remained in active service until November when, because of his wounds, he began to fail and was taken to a hospital in Flanders.

Leader Selects Oregon

Crippled and weakened, Colonel Leader

left the hospital and was declared unfit for active service. The war department offered him the choice of three means of service. One to take command of the officers training camp of Cambridge University, in which there were chances for further promotion, another of administration work which guaranteed a fair remuneration and the third to take charge of the officers training camp at the University of Oregon, which promised neither advancement nor a great amount of remuneration, but it did promise a fifty-fifty chance to see more active service as it was the Colonel's belief that there would be an attempt to invade the Pacific coast. He accepted the latter.

Colonel Leader arrived here in December, 1917, and took command of the University battalion, and later of the Oregon State Officers' Training camp. During this period he also assisted in the raising of 90 units of home guards throughout the state and assisted in commanding them. In 1919 he was made an honorary colonel in the United States army by a vote of the legislature of the state of Oregon.

Idleness Is Disliked

Speaking of the last three years the Colonel said, "The worst war I have ever been in has been twiddling my thumbs. I can't stand having nothing to do." So Colonel Leader, the honored warrior and beloved friend of every Oregon man and woman, is going to return to England where he can enjoy

CHAS. RAY AT HEILIG

Commencing today at the Heilig theater, the many local admirers of Charles Ray will have the opportunity of seeing him in what promises to be his masterpiece, if time, care, and a great story count for something: a cinema version of the intensely popular stage play, "A Tailor Made Man." For this is the costliest production Charles Ray has ever made, and is in keeping with his announced policy of two super-productions a year for United Artists. In fact, "A Tailor Made Man" is Ray's first screen play under his new alignment.

According to critics who previewed this production, Charles Ray has been provided with a vehicle which allows him full scope for his ever delightful humor, wit, and tenderness. "A Tailor Made Man" is said to rank with the highest achievements of the motion picture art.

ENROLLMENT UP TO 2179

The last report of enrollment from the registrar's office is 2179. The enrollment in the medical school is 194, which makes a total of 2373 and pre-ages an entire enrollment for the year of approximately 2500.
