Take Oregon Home

In a few short days you will be "back home." Whether you are a senior or a first term you owe to your Alma Mater a definite duty of impressing the people of your town as to what Oregon really is—its ideals, and its hopes. There is, of course, a very efficient body on the campus, "The Greater Oregon Committee," whose definite task that is, but the burden of the work must fall on the individual students.

With the individual student rests the task of creating a spirit of friendliness toward and cooperation with the University of Oregon and its aims. With recent talk of reduced taxation and unnecessary expense, much of which openly and covertly has been directed at the state institutions of higher learning, there is a decided need for an antidote for so insidious a poison. That antidote rests largely in the hands of the student body.

Publicity may pour from the University of Oregon showing the variety and value of the work done here but it is useless unless it is driven home by the personal touch that only the individual students can give.

For those who love Oregon, and the Emerald believes that applies to all, Christmas vacation is an admirable time to interest prospective students in the advantages of Oregon. In an athletic way the future of Oregon's success on floor and field depends more or less directly on the efficiency with which you can interest athletes in Oregon.

A Question of Honor

Integrity in the matter of examinations is not a matter that should merit public comment but unfortunately there are always a few that seek the easy way of making up a lot of work they overlooked during the term. A definite standard of personal integrity should be built up on the Oregon campus that would preclude any repetition of the group of "cases" that each term find themselves before the disciplinary committee.

Shy Huntington has been elected head coach for another year. It is now a question of backing him by giving him the best possible material to work with. Get in and dig! Talk Oregon to high school athletes!

BETA GAMMA SIGMA ELECTS Paul Patterson, Floyd Shields, Ray Al Lomax, C. L. Kelly, Ralf Couch, Boyer.
