

COAST COLLEGES CONFER AT REED

MacGregor Attends Gathering Occasioned by Visit of Foreign Students

John MacGregor, president of the student body, left yesterday afternoon for Reed College, Portland, as a representative of the University at a coast conference of institutions of higher learning. The conference was called by Reed College for March 9, 10 and 11, when the foreign students, who visited the Oregon campus last week-end will be there to discuss student problems and world affairs with the coast students.

It is the desire of the conference to bring the universities and colleges of the coast together while the European visitors, Jorgen Holck of Denmark, Hans Tiesler of Germany, and Piet Roest of Holland will be there to lead in the discussion of conditions in Europe, with special attention to the "youth movements" in those countries.

Opportunity Is Unique
"We consider it a unique opportunity to discuss with these men the conditions in Europe as they know them, particularly to learn the extent and strength of the "youth movements" in which they have all taken places of leadership," reads the Reed College invitation.

"We are taking the liberty of inviting representatives of the colleges and universities of the Northwest, including British Columbia, to a general conference, on the occasion of the visit of our European friends. We believe that the problem of reconstruction is one that concerns all of us, and necessitates our thinking through to some fundamental positions on social and economic conditions in modern life. We believe that great good will result from a mutual exchange of ideas, in developing an effective esprit de corps. We accordingly invite your college to send us two or more representatives to meet with us and the European visitors, for a three-day conference beginning Friday, March 9."

Situation Is Studied
It is the desire of the convention to canvass the present university situation, with a view to discovering whether changes in curriculum are necessary to meet the requirements of intelligent leadership under modern conditions; whether a closer relationship ought not to exist between faculty and students as common searchers for truth and whether there ought not to be a clearer definition of the place of the university and college in modern life.

Other topics of discussion will be the present human situation under the heads of the economic, political and social bases and resources of modern life; democracy as a constructive program of universal education, whose necessary condition is world peace; possible ways and means, including exchange of scholarships and professorships, or developing an effective intelligence of world problems.

Another phase of world problems to be discussed comes under the head of personality. This includes the submergence of personality under modern industrial conditions, and the respect due to personality, and the responsibilities of freedom.

Foreigners Like Oregon
The following extract from a letter received by John MacGregor from Herbert Little, president of the University of Washington student body, indicates that the students from overseas were pleased with their visit to Oregon. "The European students who have been at the University of Oregon arrived here today," writes Little. "They tell me they had the most delightful time of their entire stay in the United States, at Eugene."

THRILLS OF SEA-FARING LIFE ARE ENCOURAGING

tarred riggin'? Doesn't it make the seafaring blood in you leap and bound with excitement? Sign on with skipper Lane now. Sail away and see the world and make your fortune; then return after a span of years, find the only girl waiting for you and settle down and dream of the foaming main and a lee shore.

Sign on now men. Pack your dunnage in the old seabag and stand by to go about. Sign men, for the greatest education that the world offers. There is a scientific turn to the ocean. The law of rising bodies that won't fall again (seasickness), man the rail!

Think of standing at the tiller and imagining that you are Lief Erickson or some of his husky Norse brothers, bucking the tides in an eggshell. Think of the kick in swaggering up the quay of the far-off ports with the natives staring goggle-eyed at your seaman swagger. Sign on men for the ship is in the offing.

P. L. CAMPBELL RETURNS

Trip to California Made in Interest of Endowment Campaign

President Prince L. Campbell returned Thursday evening from a trip in the south where he visited the University of California and in San Francisco in the interests of the University endowment campaign. The president spent Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday at Berkeley looking for new instructors as additions to the University of Oregon faculty.

While in the bay section President Campbell discussed informally the situation of the University of Oregon in reference to the endowment campaign. The plan as presented was well received and great interest was shown, according to President Campbell.

Campbell Church, who accompanied the president, went from Berkeley to Palo Alto, where he will discuss with President Wilbur of Stanford University the plan as adopted by that institution in its campaign for funds. In the past year over $1,000,000 has been raised as a fund used chiefly in the interests of the Stanford medical school.

UNIQUE RESTORATION MADE FROM OLD PLANT

Raymond Porter Constructs Crinoid Arm Tracing Back to Growth of Paleozoic Age

An addition to the laboratory equipment of the University geology department is a large restoration of a crinoid arm, made by Raymond Porter, a senior in the department. Crinoids, known as sea lilies, have been traced as far back in the geological column as the Carboniferous period of the Paleozoic group and are classified with the Mississippian echinoderms.

It is understood that the restoration which is many times larger than the original, is unique in the line of laboratory equipment. The work is perfected in such minute details that even the cilia of the plant-like sea animal are represented. It is being used by the class in paleontology in the study of prehistoric life. Crinoids are still existent in the Tertiary, the present era.

In making the restoration of the crinoid arm, Porter had no models to work from other than illustrations and fossilized specimens imbedded in limestone formations. Dr. Earl R. Packard, instructor in paleontology and geology, assisted Porter in making the model.

During the Silurian period of the Paleozoic these flower-like animals became very abundant on the sea bottoms and it is said they must have presented an appearance not unlike that of a field of lilies. A great many of the animals lived during this time and many varieties of forms were developed.

ARCHITECT STUDENTS GET SIX FIRST MENTIONS

Sophomore Problem of an End Pavilion Draws Favorable Comment; Many Show Marked Originality

Judgments on the latest problems of the three upper classes in architecture have just been made, with six first mentions. The sophomore problem was An End Pavilion—a two-week sketch.

"The pavilions are very interesting," said Professor W. R. B. Wilcox, of the department of architecture and allied arts. "The work shows originality."

First mention—Harold J. Wagner and Frank B. Dorman.

Second mention—Lloyd T. Terrill, Katherine Ashmead, Richard T. Carruthers.

In the junior problem—A Common Building—Clarence H. Irwin and Arnold R. Southwell received first mentions. There were three second mentions—Fred S. Junken, James P. Haynes, and Fook Tai Lau.

The senior problem—A mountain home—had but one second mention, awarded to Truman Phillips.

The sophomores did a three-day sketch of a village besides. For this work Katherine Ashmead received first mention and the compliments of the jury. Her composition was very decorative in design. Frank Dorman also received first mention. The second mentions were awarded to Edgar Bohman, Lloyd Terrill, Richard Carruthers and Harold Wagner.

author then develops the idea that these successes have not been the result of accident or luck, but that they, and all success in business, are due to thinking and calculation on the part of the individual.

The book creates, by the inspirational viewpoint from which it is written, a desire in the individual to want to succeed and to strive for it by learning to work and to think. The A. C. McClurg company expressed their satisfaction in the work and stated that it is the type of work that is needed in the business world.

Mr. Nagley has written a number of articles for magazines on business subjects, but this is his first book.
