The faculty of the University is not in a conspiracy against the students, with a view to getting rid of all but college of literature, science and the arts, when an Emerald reporter apracv.'

"Yes," Dean Dyment said gravely, after appearing to think for a moment, when the reporter put his first question 4/points, third place 3 points and one on the subject, "I have heard of the intellectual aristocracy." And the gleam which with him usually takes the place of a smile, hovered somewhere in the offing.

"The expression 'intellectual aristocracy' did not originate at the University of Oregon," Dean Dyment began, "and when it was first used here, it was used with quotation marks. It apparently originated with the president of an endowed university in the east, but it may have originated with some eastern university student." Dean Dyment added that most affected and highbrow expressions of this sort originate with students.

"Paddock should have the greatest Needs of Every Individual to Be Cared for When Grounds and Buildings Are Complete

By John Anderson

Suppose you take a walk up to the Barracks this morning, get some fresh air and while there you may, if you we are soon to have. Stand at the southeastern corner and, imagining yourself on the balcony of a new gymnasium building, look over the 14 city blocks of sloping land before you and picture the physical education plant which is shortly to take form.

First let your eye travel rapidly over the entire area-five great terraces, the lower one bordering on Agate street four blocks away and containing Hayward field, the new baseball diamond, large terrace at the right, running a little more than half way across the 1140 foot width of the tract, containing four intramural baseball fields, and, where the land slopes more swiftly at the left, this large terrace divided into two narrower ones, each large enough for two baseball fields; and on the whelming defeat to Washington high fourth terrace, which stretches to your right along University avenue, the gymnasium, covered outdoor handball courts, more play fields, and perhaps sometime an armory up at the corner of Eighteenth and University streets.

> This is the far-reaching plan of the school of physical education to be carried out in conjunction with the associated students as rapidly as possible.

> Diamond, Tennis Courts First Baseball diamond, tennis courts, and the 220 yard straightaway einder track are the first units on which work will begin. Engineers have completed contour maps of the baseball field and have worked out the drainage system which

As to the faculty viewpoint of this famous aristocracy-"We are simply pawns in this game between public and students," Dean Dyment said. "The intellectual aristocracy is not being forced upon the students of the state University by the faculty; it is being forced upon them by the farmers pointed out.

Problem Is Paradox

"Thus we have a Chesterton paradox," he said. "The class of people supposed to be least in sympathy with universities is about to insist that the University be of the very highest grade. The most expensive type of education will be the cheapest. The people of Oregon in their present state of mind do not believe that the state can afford to give the upper seven years of education at the public expense, if the whole public between the ages of 14 and 23 is going to take advantage." By the upper seven years of education, Dean Dyment explained, he meant the four years spent in undergraduate Ceremony Taken from Story of King work, and the three years of graduate work, provided for at the University.

"I believe the cost of living at the University of Oregon is less than that of Oregon." The faculty is helpless, so of any other institution in the counhelpless, in fact, that it could not try," said Jack Benefiel, graduate manintervene successfully in the students' ager of the University. This Univerbehalf, even if it wanted to, the dean sity and O. A. C. are about on a par, he said. The student body fee at the University of Washington is a little less than ours but drives to support activities run the expenses up'a great deal higher in the long run. At California there is no compulsory fee to activities but students have to pay to go to games and festivities which runs the cost up very high. At Idaho and Stanford the cost of "being present" is very much higher, Benefiel said. At the University of Illinois support of activities burns up $295 a year.
