Relieve the Congestion

The custom of prescribing term papers as a major portion of the term's work seems to be growing among the professors, and with it comes an increasing congestion at the end of each term. Students feverishly search through reference books and encyclopedias, and pound the typewriter in the wee small hours of the morning in a vain endeavor to strike off something in a short time which will remotely resemble the work of several weeks.

When a student has only one such manuscript to prepare, the result is not quite so confusing, but when he has as many as seven in one term, and all of these due the last week of school, the possible value for each is minimized.

Of course, he has had at least a month's time or more in which to prepare his papers, but there exists in the mind of all humans an innate tendency to leave as much as possible for tomorrow. Matriculation in a University does not wholly eradicate this tendency. In the old days, the thought of approaching exams was bad enough—but now with term papers added, the last few days of the term are a period of almost hopeless confusion.

Some professors have, and very wisely, too, assigned the term paper for the first part of the term rather than the last. This method has several advantages. The organization of material necessary in the preparation of such work forms an excellent background for the remainder of the term's work. Furthermore, the papers can be read with greater care, and such criticism as is made will be really valuable—and not merely passed by as "old stuff"—which is the case when it is received after the term's grade has already been made up.

A more calm and peaceful state of mind on the campus at examination time is highly desirable. One step in that direction will be taken when the work of term papers is spread more evenly throughout the term.

It Could Be Done

One who wishes that the University could get down to "brass tacks" on the Student Union proposition has submitted a concrete suggestion. He says that a building of this nature should be constructed by units, the first one of which would cost approximately $50,000. Then if every living organization and those honoraries which are able would adopt plans similar to those used by Delta Gamma and by Hammer and Coffin, the money would be guaranteed. Plans are provided by building and loan associations for such gifts, he says. Then—with all this definitely assured, he thinks that it would be nothing more than routine business for the A. S. U. O. to borrow the amount and to construct the building. No need of waiting ten years, he says.

For House Meetings Only

Several groups have expressed themselves as very strongly opposed to any attempt to cut in on the Monday night reservation for house meetings. Such encroachments have been attempted in the past and the tendency is growing. It is, of course, extremely difficult to prepare for a concert or a play without practice every night in the week.

Nevertheless house meetings are important and they come first. Monday night has always been reserved and there is no reason for professors and directors trying to break the custom. House meetings cannot be efficiently conducted with half the members absent.

MISS HELLER IS ON CAMPUS

Plans for Entertainment Changed; Friday Arrangements Not Made

Arrangements for the entertainment of Miss Elsie B. Heller, student secretary of the Y. W. C. A. for the Northwest field, have been slightly changed, according to LeLaine West, president of the Y. W., who has charge of her program. Her revised program, which is subject to change at any time, is as follows: Wednesday, luncheon, Kappa Kappa Gamma house; Wednesday, 5 p. m., meeting of freshman commission at the Y. W. C. A., followed by the council of religion banquet at the Anchorage in honor of Mr. Foster of the Y. M. C. A.; Thursday luncheon, Susan Campbell hall; Thursday at 4:30 council of religion local problems discussion, followed by the annual Y. W. C. A. banquet at the Hotel Osburn. The advisory board and council of the Y. W. were hostesses at an informal tea on Tuesday afternoon from 4 to 5:30 to meet Miss Heller. Margaret Phillips and Marian Lay had charge of this affair, which was given at the Bungalow. Mrs. George Bohler, president of the advisory board, poured. Miss Heller's plans for Friday have not been made since the time for her departure is uncertain.

Campus Swamped by Culture Sheet

Two young ladies and a young gentleman came strolling up the street. They reached the corner, turned, seemed to change their minds, turned back, and then around again. They repeated this process three or four times, and seemed to be deeply interested and engrossed in the perusal of a small paper pamphlet. If one could have looked over their shoulders, he would have seen at the top of the page, the words "Who Are the Cultured?" and underneath a picture of a man, walking between two girls. "Find three blunders in this picture" was the inscription. For the past few days the Eugene post office has been deluged with these small pamphlets. Where they come from, no one seems to know, but to the layman it is very evident where they are received, for everywhere one sees students reading them. The strange thing about it, according to some recipients, is that only a few students out of every living organization receive them. The question therefore arises—have these few been shadowed, their atrocious manners observed, and the booklets sent as a gentle reminder? "How much do you know about good

PROMINENT Y WORKER TO ADDRESS STUDENTS

Veteran Officer Has Traveled Extensively in Asia

The speaker at the regular assembly of the University this week will be Frank Ober, international secretary of the Y. M. C. A. and representative of the Near East Relief, on his present tour of the West. His topic deals with problems in the Near East, with which he is familiar, as he has traveled extensively in connection with his office on the international committee of the Y. M. C. A.

Mr. Ober is a writer of considerable prominence among religious workers throughout the country and is the author of a number of volumes relating to religious subjects. For 25 years he has been connected with the general program of the Y. M. C. A., and has had ample opportunity to become familiar with conditions among the stricken people of the Near East in the last few years of his service, which has kept him in close touch with social needs all over the world. His headquarters is New York City, but at present he is on a tour of a district of the United States which includes the Pacific coast. He is traveling in the interest of the organization and is attempting to relieve the suffering and actual want that exists in many sections of Asia.

Thursday noon, Mr. Ober will address the Eugene Chamber of Commerce. His address at assembly will be his only appearance before the University students. He is stopping in Eugene on his way from San Francisco to Portland. His program includes appearances in both of these cities.

manners?" reads one heading. "How should corn on the cob be eaten?"—"Give me the corn," said one freshman, "and I'll give you a good illustration."

There follow several admonitions which have received timely comments from some quarters. "Never permit a servant to pour wine when you do not expect to drink it!" ("Yes," says one student, "but we always do expect to drink it when we get an opportunity!") "Never permit your knife and fork to strike your plate!"—"But how," says another man, "do they expect you to make connections with your mouth?" All these weighty problems have been discussed pro and con by students, and it remains to be seen whether the gentle reminder will have the effect upon the student population that, evidently, was hoped for by the sender of the booklets.

"THE HERO" AT THE REX

Those who hold the belief that the day of the one star picture is passing in favor of the production which features a number of players of high calibre, will have their theory substantiated in "The Hero," the feature now running at the Rex theater. The remarkable play by Gilbert Emery was an outstanding success on Broadway last season, is now translated to the medium of pictures.
