Cooperation and Congestion

The congestion in the University library is indeed regrettable. President Campbell holds out hope of a million-dollar library in the future.

Until that structure is built, something must be done to relieve and improve the present situation.

The library personnel, though handicapped, is giving courteous and efficient service.

It behooves the student, therefore, to cooperate with the library officials so that the crowded conditions may be ameliorated.

Study, if possible, at other times than during the rush hours, namely on Friday and Saturday and during the mornings.

Read the reserve books if possible during the meal hours.

Do not use the library when not using library material or when using books that may be taken out.

Purchase as many books as possible of important collateral reading, especially in major subjects.

When approaching the reserve desk have in mind exactly what is wanted.

See that three lines are formed to the reserve desk. One line slows up the process of handing out books.

Urge that professors make reserve reading assignments very definite.

The library officials attribute the early term congestion as much to the inexperience of the attendants as to the heavy patronage of the students.

Observation of the feasibility of the present system will take place for two weeks. If, by that time, the crowded conditions have not been bettered, other methods to improve the situation will be tried.

Let every student do his part.

Pay your fees early. This advice, if followed, will save a great deal of trouble. Every year some students have been worried with petitions and other forms made necessary by late payment which might have been averted had they heeded the above advice. The fee windows on the second floor of the Administration building opened yesterday and many students took advantage of the opportunity to square themselves with the University and the student body. As the week goes on the lines before the windows will grow longer and longer. Next week some of you will be facing the problem of re-entering Oregon if attention is not given this matter.

Wednesday Oregon sends its fighting team to Pendleton, world-famous Let 'er Buck town. The spirit which has made the Pendleton round-up the greatest exhibition of its kind in the world will be there to welcome Oregon's eleven. A rally is planned by the yelling to give the boys a real send-off. Let's give them as much here as the buckaroo town is bound to do when the team hits Pendleton.

The student body picture, taken last Thursday, is one of the best pieces of photography seen on the campus in years. The man who took it is an artist and deserves commendation and support in its sale.

A PRACTICAL JOKER

To the Editor:
I was strolling down that street beyond the University haygardens, where last year's pavers engaged in an endurance contest, when I doubled myself in a spasm of delight. Directly in front of Mr. McClain's Co-op, which has always been my idea of a good joke, I discovered a big, brawny signboard with one that knocked me off my pins. "University Co-op, Student Owned," it read.

I wiped the tears from my eyes. Somehow I can never get over that one, though I think it would have been better had it been enclosed in quotes. However, it is no business of mine to suggest, for surely, if Mr. McClain, our University humorist, thought the status quo is funniest, it must be; for no one can pull such good ones as Mr. McClain. I chuckle again.

Then there was that one about the rooters' hats that Mr. McClain very amusingly told the Oregon Knights were "official."

I find myself choked with amusement when I think of this one, for I can think of few things funnier than the "Thundering Thousand" bedecked in Mr. McClain's latest contribution to the cause of humor.

What a sense of humor the man has, for surely no one would inflict upon us such an affront to our aesthetic sense unless he intended it as a joke.

A reporter whispered over my ear that Ben Maxwell, a director of the Co-op, just resigned because he found that he knew so little about the Co-op that he couldn't in the least explain that one about the caps or, in fact, anything about the Co-op itself. How Mr. McClain must have laughed at that!

Such humorists should be encouraged. But alas! Here comes the president of the Co-op, Mr. Jack Myers, with the statement that he will announce in the Emerald that the old tasseled hat will again be the official headgear of Oregon, our alma mater. Someone is always spoiling a good joke.

Anyhow, Mr. McClain, for the sake of humor, if for nothing else, I ask you to please explain that one about the rooters' hats to the students of the University, for I have reason to believe that the student body will find ways of learning it, if information is not volunteered.

Are You Satisfied?

Housemanagers, how often do you hear the bunch complaining about the class of meat they are getting? Are you getting the best?

The rest of the meal works out all right. There is not much difference in bread, butter, potatoes, etc., but meat—well, the surest way to be safe is to call "38" and let us solve the meat problem.
