The Passing of the Leaves

Garbed in magnificent crimson, the leaf, gyrating in its uncertain course, descends to the earth. This is autumn's formal opening, the first sign of a fading summer. The trees, their gorgeous foliage thus releasing, put the rake-man to his task.

Withered, sere, and yellow, the once deep-hued leaf now with stillness disturbed only by Indian summer's gentle gusts, lies dead, forlorn on the verdure of the campus lawn. Villard in her ephemeral glory midst the down of the trailing vine, now again commences to show the season's turning.

There the gardener plies his rake. Gathering, gathering, through the day he collects his quarry and carts them away, not to return. Each moment a life fades, another of nature's little children passes on.

Goodbye, pretty leaves, we are parted. Into mere nothing you will soon disappear. And after the bleak cold days have passed, out from eternity you will again respond to that orb's caressing warmth. You will breathe again in the springtime, pretty leaves. You will pour out to us your youthful innocent freshness, and we will rejoice in your return.

Thus is the change. Something comes, and again it goes. For a while we exult in the beauties surrounding us. Then suddenly as the night replaces the day, such pleasures are snatched from us, only to appear again at happy intervals.

Hello! Say It and Mean It.

A friend calls to our attention the apparent reluctance, or more properly, the hesitancy displayed by some students to say "hello." "As I walked down the street," says our correspondent, "I spoke to a co-ed. My greeting met with no response. Soon after I wretched in smiles the countenance which had been sobered by the first repulse, for one of my professors approached. But, alas, he was steeped in thought, I guessed, and though I ventured a meek hello, I was again thwarted in my attempt at sociability. To heap insult upon injury, I next passed a freshman, and was entirely ignored by that gentleman.

"I need not tell you what impression this gave me of the renowned Oregon spirit." The above calls for little comment. The disappointment of the person involved serves to show in what respects the weight of our traditions may be weakened.
Do YOU say hello?
Then Say Hello First.

FLASH VIEWS OF THE DOINGS OF COLLEGE FOLK ELSEWHERE

Literary expression at the University of Michigan has its opportunities in three campus magazines, The Sunday Magazine, The Chimes and Whimsies.

The Yale News is the oldest college daily. The New Haven publication was founded on January 28, 1878.

A fountain pen "filling station" has been installed in the library at Northwestern University. When your pen goes dry you drop a penny in the slot and pull a lever. Enough ink flows forth to fill the largest pen tank.

Complying with requests made by Whitman College authorities, more than 400 new street lights are being installed on the Whitman campus and on the streets of Walla Walla.

University of Nebraska is to have a "Dad's Day" soon. "Dad's Day" last year was an unqualified success, according to the committee in charge. More than 1,000 dads took possession of the campus.

SOME HIGH POINTS IN OREGON EMERALD OF NOVEMBER 7, 1922

Charles Parsons, backfield on the varsity, will be out of the game for the rest of the season due to injuries.

Sixteen games have been scheduled for the varsity quintet.

A soccer schedule has been arranged to meet the demands of faculty members and students who have only a limited amount of time for out-of-door sports.

Earle Richardson, Oregon graduate in the class of 1920 and a major in the school of journalism, has purchased the Elgin recorder.

Cosmopolitan club officers will be elected tonight.

JUNIORS PLAN TO WIN PUBLICITY WITH BRUSH

shoes larger than the reasonable size of 15.

The feature of the day will be the lottery which will be conducted in front of the library between 9 and 11 o'clock. Each customer who presents himself then and there will be given a numbered ticket, and a duplicate ticket will be placed in a box. At exactly 11 o'clock, a number will be drawn from the box by one of the junior girls and the holder of the lucky number will be thereupon presented with a handsome shoe-shining kit. The kit will be on display at the Co-op for several days previous to the affair, so
