Justin Miller Speaks on Journalism Ethics

The Oregon code of ethics for journalism, written by Dean Colin V. Dymont, was declared to be the best code of its kind in the United States, by the committee on ethics of Sigma Delta Chi, according to George H. Godfrey, Oregon delegate, who returned Sunday from the annual convention of the journalism fraternity at the University of Minnesota in Minneapolis.

The session was held November 19, 20 and 21. This committee is headed by F. W. Beckman, head of the department of journalism at Iowa State college, and a code of ethics similar to the one in this state is soon to be drawn up.

Convention is Ninth
The convention, which is the ninth to be held by the fraternity, elected Melville E. Stone, counselor of the Associated Press, as national honorary member. Only three other men have been thus recognized, among them being the late Warren G. Harding, president of the United States. National officers elected at this time were: T. Hawley Tapping, former secretary, national president; James Wright Brown, publisher of Editor and Publisher, national honorary president; Donald Clark, first vice-president; R. R. Barlow, second vice-president; George Pierrot, formerly of the University of Washington and now on the staff of the American Boy, secretary; Peter Vischer, of the New York World, treasurer; and W. E. Drips, alumni secretary.

New Chapter Granted
A chapter of the fraternity was granted to Washington State college, and the delegate from the University of Toronto was welcomed at this time. These two additions now swell the total of chapters in this country and Canada to 38, and about six other organizations are petitioning for admittance to the group.

An ethical afternoon meeting was one of the features of the national convocation. At this session, which was devoted to discussing ethics of journalism, Justin Miller, formerly of the law school at the University here, and now in the law department of the University of Minnesota, was the principle speaker. H. Z. Mitchell, nationally known for his work as editor of the Bemidji Sentinel, also spoke on the place of the country weekly. The Minneapolis Tribune and Minneapolis Journal, the leading papers of the twin cities, each were hosts at banquets given for the delegates, and the convention en masse was taken through the plant of the Journal, where an extra edition of the paper was run off the press as a souvenir.

Iowa Wins Contest
Iowa State college again won the efficiency contest, with North Dakota second, Kansas State third and O. A. C. fourth. The contest is to be continued another year.

One of the important resolutions drawn up and adopted by the convention favored higher wages for reporters and writers on newspapers, and the delegates went on record as favoring a high standard for all journalistic enterprises. Hammer and Coffin, national publishing society, was also recognized as a journalistic society of growing importance, and dual membership in the society and Hammer and Coffin was favored.

Social affairs for the delegates included banquets, luncheons, and a dance at which Theta Sigma Phi, national women's journalism fraternity, was hostess.

The national convocation will be held at the University of Indiana, at Indianapolis, next November.

MORTAR BOARD HOLDS INITIATION CEREMONY

Marian Giger and Marian Downs, Formerly of Scroll and Script, Join Group

Initiation of two members of Scroll and Script into Mortar Board took place at the Woman's building at eight o'clock Sunday morning. The ceremony was followed by a breakfast at the Anchorage, at which a large number of the alumni members of Mortar Board gathered.

Scroll and Script was granted a charter of Mortar Board, national honorary upperclass society for women, last year and at its installation all former members of the original campus organization were taken into the national. Several were unable to be present at that time, however, and of these, Marian Neil Giger and Marian Stowe Downs were the two who returned for Homecoming and were initiated on Sunday.

Active members of Mortar Board on the campus now include Miriam Swartz, Rosalia Keber, Velma Farnham, Mary Alexander, Freda Goodrich, Harriet Veazie, Anabel Denn

SMALL POTTERY HORSE PLEAS

L. A. Lewis Interested in Tang Period Figure

"That's like asking me which of twenty young ladies I think the best looking," was the reply of L. A. Lewis, when asked if there was one piece in the Murray Warner museum that interested him most. Mr. Lewis, of the firm of Allen and Lewis, Portland, has for a hobby the collection of Oriental art, and came Friday to attend the opening of the museum at the invitation of President P. L. Campbell.

At last, however, as a man might be finally led to confess for a blond lady, or one of a certain type, Mr. Lewis expressed an especially fondness for porcelains. His own collection of porcelains is known throughout the northwest. This year he presented a pottery statue of a peddler to the Portland art museum. Its workmanship dates back to the Tang period, as does the small pottery horse in the old Women's league room. Like all peddlers, Mr. Lewis said, it is not a native of the country in which it was found, but looks like it came from much further west.

The horse interested Mr. Lewis, who said it was one of the Arabian types. The Chinese have another type of short Mongolian pony in their art as well. The action, spirit, and anatomy were commended in this one by Mr. Lewis.

"It is more realistic than many of their things," he said, looking at it intently with his shrewd, kindly eyes. He said it had originally been painted, but the dampness and mold had taken out the coloring.

The old Chinese custom, Mr. Lewis stated, was once to bury a man's wives, servants and animals with him when he died. Gradually the custom changed, and models of them were made to accompany him to the hereafter. The little horse

Kappa Sigma Gives Bond for the Student Union Building

The gift fund campaign of the University is in receipt of a $1,000 bond from Kappa Sigma fraternity to apply on the construction, equipment, or furnishing of a student union building for the University of Oregon. Kappa Sigma announced its intention of giving this money to the University and this bond is the fulfillment of that intention.

The bond is taken out with the Western Bond and Mortgage company, and is paid in installments to the University for its gift campaign. It was given into the University's possession on November 12 this year.
