Alumni Publication to be Issued December 15

CLASS OF '14 TO GATHER

Feature Intended to Create
Interest in Reunion

Students are going to have a chance on December 15, when the next issue of Old Oregon is distributed, to see how millrace parties were carried on in the days of yore—in the nineties. No, there will be no detailed account, but there will be a picture of several derby-hatted men and flowery-chapeaued women, enjoying the race in—not canoes—but just rowboats. Judging from the picture, the race with its now popular haunts, was not the same then, and the part most enjoyed was where the Ninth street bridge now is.

Class Pictures Listed
There will be a picture of the class of 1882, and one of the permanent secretary, Miss Mary E. McCornack, taken in 1882. The pictures are quaint with their old-fashioned settings and clothes.

One of the most interesting articles is one by Herbert Thompson, ex-'96. The article takes up the teaching of English as it was in his day on this campus. His teacher was Dr. Luella Clay Carson. Mr. Thompson is a writer for the New York Mail at present, and it is an interesting fact to notice that his article is illustrated by "Compositions" he wrote when he was at Oregon.

The third article on deans of the University is about George Rebec, written by Nancy Wilson, '24. Rebec is dean of the graduate school. He returned this fall from a year's trip in Europe, where he studied several colleges, principally Oxford.

'14 to Have Reunion

Len Jordan has written an article on the athletic question with regard to "Shy" Huntington. A page devoted to athletics, edited by Webster Jones, and a page of poetry edited by Margaret Skavlan, takes up the student part of the publication.

The class of '14, which is putting on a reunion next commencement, rivalling that of the class of '13, last summer, is printing a list of "personals" apart from the personal section. This is for the purpose of getting members of the class interested in their old classmates. F. Harold Young, of Portland, permanent secretary, has charge of the "personal" column.

URGED BY LEADER

every other university and college, the chief building and the center of the campus is the university museum. Personally, I am far more interested in the workings of the University in, say, the eighties and in the personalities and actions of the students in any year, than in all the foreign notables in the world. Neither Hunk or Hal bears any striking resemblance to Rudolph Valentino, but 20 years hence, I reckon that the student body would sooner have the photos of these two men on view.

I know, of course, that a highly efficient student has been selected to look after the varsity doings, and file them in that extraordinary attic in the library which is called the varsity museum. I know that files of the Emerald and other papers are kept by the library and the school of journalism, and I know that Dean Sheldon is compiling a history, and knowing him as I do, I know his work will be valuable—but all that is not the point. The indelible scar on our varsity honor is that we have no department to preserve our traditions; in fact, that in our mental inertia, we quite miss the meaning of the "Oregon Spirit."

One realizes the nature of the opposition: no money, no space. The first objection is, of course, childish. Savings could be made in other ways, and, anyhow, it need not cost much; as to the second: in the spring of 1918, we had not enough classroom space for our student body. In October, 1918, our student body had increased over fifty per cent, and we had three hundred men, in addition, in the Oregon's Officers' Training Corps. It was quite a job fitting them all in. In fact it took me nearly an hour's planning to fit them in comfortably.

I suggest now that a campus building be dedicated to this high purpose of preserving traditions; that the strongest man and the best organizer on the faculty be made head of this department; that from the members of the faculty who have most spare time, eight should be carefully selected and scheduled to give four hours a day each, until we have caught up; that from the student body two men and two co-eds be elected, and that credits to almost any extent should be given them for their work. Thus a department could be organized to take this reproach from us.

In conclusion, may I point out that foreign criticism, if well meant, is generally valuable, as it is the opinion of a kind of contemporary posterity; that we are in a sense, the Pilgrim Fathers of the University of Oregon; for example, the initiation of freshman is—I am told—only an aggravated form of the burning of witches; and if the Pilgrim Fathers had neglected their history and traditions as we do ours, the United States might be called Topsy-Land now, and you could only surmise that you had "just grown."

DOCTORS CHECK WORK

Re-examination to be Made of Cases
Noted at First of Year

Dr. Bertha Stuart, University physician for women, and assistants in her department are very busy this week adding the final touches to the term's work and checking up corrective cases which were noted at the beginning of the year.

Appointments have been made for freshmen or sophomore women who are underweight, and for all heart and lung cases. All of these are to be re-examined and any improvements noted.

EMERALD TO MAKE LAST APPEARANCE DECEMBER 16

The Emerald will make its last appearance on the campus this term, Sunday, December 16. There will be no issues during exam week. The final Emerald for the year 1923 is to be an eight page paper, and will be composed of news and features.

PICTURE MOUNTING STARTS NEXT WEEK

Cover Design for Oregonian is Decided Upon

Students who have not had their photographs taken for the Oregonian may have them done during the remainder of this week and all of next week, is the statement made by Freda Goodrich, editor of the 1924 issue of the publication.

"Work is progressing so rapidly that picture-mounting will begin next week," announced Miss Goodrich. For that reason it is desirable that every photograph should be in the hands of those in charge of the mounting at once. "To date over 1,000 portraits have been taken, but there are still more to be photographed within the next week," she continued.

The staff is working diligently on a schedule and the duties of each member are arranged so that a definite amount of work is accomplished every week.

The design for the cover of the book has been finally approved of and sent east to be finished. Last week-end the order for the paper was placed. About 1,600 copies will be printed this year, which is about 100 more than last year. The number of pages in this year's issue will be 484, exceeding last year's number by 20.

Miss Goodrich stressed the fact that all organizations have not sent in their checks and that they must have them in not later than this week. After that time, no space will be saved for tardy payments.

ALL-STAR TEAMS PICKED BY STAFF

flash, and Percy Looney, of the Aggies, have both been consistent performers this season, also.

Dick Faville, of Stanford, and Jimmy Bryan, the sorrel topped Washingtonian, take the first call for the guard berths. Both of these men have been strong points in their respective lines, in spite of the fact that Bryan was handicapped by minor injuries throughout the season. Bellman, of Washington, and Hawkins, of U. S. C., have also done noteworthy work during the past season.

To Hal Chapman, for his ability as a field general and his accuracy as a place kicker, goes the position of All-Coast quarterback. Close on his heels, however, is the Stanford signal barker, Scotch Campbell, whose ability to run back kicks and to skirt ends makes him a dangerous man at all times. The halfback positions would go to Don Nichols, of California, and to Johnnie Wilson, of the Huskies, although there are a number of men on the coast, such as Blewett, California; Fitzke, Idaho, and Zeil, Washington, who are backs of exceptional ability. The staff was unanimous in its choice of Ernie Nevers, the Stanford steam roller, for fullback. This big fellow's line smashes have been the sensation of the coast this fall and few Gamma Mu is Name of New Chapter; University Members Will Attend Ceremony indeed are the times he has been stepped in less than two yards.

Nichols is Captain

This lineup would present a forward defense that would average better than 200 pounds from tackle to tackle, and with that a pair of ends who are good pass snatchers and are down under every kick. Each of the chosen backs are line pluggers of no mean ability, while all except Nevers, excel in open field running. Nevers could well take care of the punting, while Chapman is dangerous via the placement route within his own forty yard line. For captain of the team, the selection would go to Don Nichols, who led the Golden Bear to victory this season.

The staff realizes that the logical man to select a team of this nature is one who has officiated at a majority of the games, a man of the calibre of Sam Dolan or George Varnell, but since it has become such a popular pastime among the scribes, the Emerald sport scribes submit this selection. The second All-Coast team would be:

Ends: Hickey, W. S. C.; Phythian, U. S. C. Tackles: Looney, O. A. C.; Kuhn, Wash. Guards: Bellman, Wash.; Hawkins, U. S. C. Center: Walters, Wash. Quarter: Campbell, Stanford; Halves, Fitzke, Idaho; Blewett, Cal. Full: Tesreau, Washington.
