

VALUE OF BASEBALL AT OREGON DOUBTED

Sport Is Poorly Suited to Local Campus

By Ken Cooper

Just at present, there seems to be a serious movement on foot to discontinue baseball as a varsity sport at Oregon. Many are the reasons which give impetus to such a move. First, the weather conditions are against the national pastime; second, baseball has to compete with or come up to the standard of professional baseball and hence is rapidly tending toward the commercialized form of the sport. A third reason that is presented, is that Oregon is known to have sunk about $4000 into the spring sport last year without what might be termed as anything like an adequate return.

On the other hand, it must be remembered that there is a percentage of students on the campus who spend their summers in sections of the country where there is little or no organized baseball and to them baseball takes a rather important aspect in the list of varsity sports. Another thing which must be taken into consideration is that Oregon is hardly in a position to drop a major sport unless similar action be taken by several other of the larger schools of the Northwest.

According to word that has been received here, the idea has been considered rather favorably by several of the major schools of this section, in fact, Washington State was the only school which was radically opposed to the discontinuation. If, for instance, four schools such as Washington, Idaho, O. A. C. and Oregon should get together and vote to abolish the diamond sport, the others would have to follow suit; but for one school to discontinue would be little short of suicidal in the face of the prestige lost. This is true, in spite of the fact that the state, at large, takes little interest in the baseball careers of the two Oregon institutions.

The weather in the Willamette valley is anything but ideal for the turning out of a successful nine and, on the contrary, is all against it. The spring rains do not let up to permit outside practice until long after the team should be well organized and in consequence it is almost impossible to develop new players in this section.

This, in turn, brings up the point that the players may play during the summer, but in order to do this a great many of them actually professionalize themselves, and so instead of having amateur teams in the colleges today, there is a large percentage that are professionals in spirit, if not in fact.

There is a great deal of sentiment on the campus to keep baseball. It has been suggested that the action of the executive council in its meeting, the other night, was to sound out the strength of the sentiment.

MLLE. PELLION TO BE COLLEGE BALL GUEST

Women's League to Raise Funds for Foreign Scholarships by Giving Dance

The University Women's league expects to have as its guest at the Christmas college ball, given at the Multnomah hotel in Portland, Thursday evening, December 27, Mademoiselle Andree Pellion, beneficiary of the foreign scholarship of the league, who is a senior in the romance language department.

The Women's league is attempting to maintain a yearly foreign scholarship fund, and the proceeds from this ball will be contributed to the fund. The first scholarship was granted last fall.

"I wish I could go home for the holidays. I miss my Christmas there," said Mademoiselle Pellion, "but I shall enjoy the holidays very much." She expects to go to France to spend the summer, which will be her first visit since she came to America more than a year ago. She will return to the United States again next fall.

During this term, Mademoiselle Pellion has lived in Susan Campbell hall, but she expects to move to Hendricks hall next term, in order that she may become acquainted with more of the women of the University. The members of the Women's league have been instrumental in bringing her to the campus and many of them have expressed the desire that the change be made so that they may have an opportunity to know her better.

CASTLE

As head of the all-star cast of John M. Stahl's new Louis B. Mayer-First National attraction, "The Wanters," showing at the Castle today, Marie Prevost is said to have one of the most attractive roles of her screen career. Beginning the picture in the character of a maid, she develops into a society debutante—a jump that not only necessitates deft plot arrangement, but also calls for finesse and versatility.

GIRLS PLAN CHEER FOR POOR CHILDREN

The Delta Gamma, Kappa Kappa Gamma and Hendricks hall are doing their bit through the Y. W. C. A. by sending in toys, clothing and gifts to be distributed among the poor, and the Tau Nus are filling several baskets which will contain gifts and Christmas dinners.

Altogether, the thoughtfulness and unselfishness among the houses is greater this year than ever before, and many little boys and girls will greet the holidays with happy hearts and smiling faces.
