

The Student MIRROR

We notice that the jolly boys of the law school were carrying canes. We wonder if they are lame physically or mentally. Allow us to suggest spats for the dramatic school and picks for the doughty boys of B. A.

We have a certain school here which is trying to work out a system. It is a guess, a supposition, and five hours of torture. It is a field for theorists who make ditch diggers think they can run a business by just being present.

We wonder which our modern girl admires the most, the man of the "great open spaces" with an "O" on his chest, or a nice little flat-chested dancing man.

Ever notice that the Oregon students are always in back of the athletic teams while the faculty is in front?

Now that the Republicans have organized a club for college students, who will organize the faculty into a democratic body. Read that over twice.

We have just finished "Town and Gown" and "Grey Towers." We found old friends in both.

The moon casts mysterious shadows over the campus. A book-laden girl scurries along. She pauses to consult wrist watch with worried mein. Increases speed. Dashes madly up library steps as though in pursuit of something—education, perhaps. She pauses and then casually saunters up stairs industriously powdering her nose. We wonder is the tryst with knowledge or experience.

Now that it is open season for the men to rate the formals, have you ever said, "Why in the shades of Erebus did she ask him?"

If students were allowed to pick their instructors for our institution of higher yearning, who would make a tour of U. S. looking up the thousands who would apply?

Your mirror is your best friend, because it always tells the truth.

acclimated shelter to adjourn to when the day's toil is complete.

When the time arrives that Plato's philosophers are ruling the world, and the intellectual life has subordinated the sensual existence, then, university men will be able to go out into the world, probably, and have no fears of collection agencies and returned checks. Plato, however, finally decided that this would come only in some form of heaven, and we decide, personally, that until this heaven is reached it is just as well to store things away in the First National, as it is to make deposits in the Higher Intellectual.
