The R. O. T. C. and the Next War

Two years ago certain persons and factions on the Oregon campus made a strong assault on the justification for retention of the Reserve Officers' Training Corps. If these forces were on the campus today, they might find themselves forced to retrench. For today the corps has been popularized more than at any time since the signing of the armistice, and the developments of international affairs have hushed the objections and served to prove the existence of the military department.

Various students enrolled in advanced military courses, when asked if they believed they were wasting their time, replied emphatically in the negative, and stated they did not intend to be left in the lurch when the next war was declared. They intended to take advantage, so they said, of the opportunities afforded now, so as to be prepared for any trend of affairs.

The next war! There are many students of history and public affairs who support the foreboding of a future international imbroglio. The economic terms upon which the last struggle was settled have not been satisfactory. France looms as a military force. Even in England there has been a lingering transfer of sentiment from pro-French to pro-German. For some Englishmen cite the French and Belgian occupation of the Ruhr as one contributing cause of the destruction of her foreign export markets and of the accompanying unemployment situation.

Furthermore, German militarism is not dead. Certain enthusiasts in Germany are calling upon the patriotic element to steel its muscles against the coming war of vengeance. And General Hasse, commanding troops in Thuringia has said: "When the fates again lead the German nation to Versailles, we must appear not as on the latest occasion, but as our fathers and forefathers did. It is for us, the heirs of the traditions of the best army of the world, to see that our German empire outlives the shameful peace."

How characteristic are these words we can only guess. But even such statements coming from a militarist indicate that the embers of war are not yet ashes, and that certain sentiment is breathing into them the glow of activity.

There either will be or will not be another war. Who can say for sure? Those who will take no chances avail themselves of the military training offered at the present. Perhaps they are wiser than those optimists who believe that the advent of the league of nations and the world court has solved all world difficulties.

Thirteen Days—Lucky or Unlucky?

Thirteen school days are all that stand between the 2175 Oregon students now on the campus and winter term examinations. A short period of the scholastic round, and then that dire week which never loses its terrors for many campus citizens.

From a fellow journalist we have received the following, on the approaching day of reckoning:

"Lent, observed by many Christians, comes at this time of year. Lent is the time above and beyond all others when the individual is called upon to take a spiritual accounting. Many believe that a voluntary abandonment of some of the frivolities of every-day life during the forty days preceding Easter is conducive to a better taking of the spiritual inventory."

"May we not borrow somewhat from the religious life to aid the student? Two weeks before 'exams' is set aside by the administration as a time when activities and social affairs shall be reduced to a minimum and the garnered time devoted to additional scholastic demands.

"Yet two or three weeks is not too soon to start 'training' physically for examinations. Approximately more regular hours, less sweets and starches, a few less cigarettes—and one stands a ten to one better chance of going over the blue-book top with a bang!

"Increasingly the statement is heard on the campus, 'No, I never cram for exams any more. The day before I take a hike or loaf, and sometimes go to a 'movie' in the evening. I feel lots better and get higher grades as a result.'

"Ralph Waldo Emerson says of the Oxford system: 'The logical English train a scholar as they train an engineer.' * * * The reading men are kept, by hard walking, hard riding and measured eating and drinking, at the top of their condition, and two days before the examination, do not work, but lounge, ride, or run, to be fresh on the college doomsday.'"

Oregon will meet the Willamette Bearcats in Salem tonight in the final basketball game of the season.

The Oregon-Stanford-Washington forensic contest will be held Thursday night, March 1.

All six stages of the ninth corps area rifle match have been fired by the three teams representing the University, with final scores of 5,368 for the first team, 5,240 for the second, and 4,928 for the third.

A campaign to secure 200 additional Oregon subscriptions will begin tomorrow and close Saturday.

The regular bi-monthly meeting of the A. S. U. O. will be held during the assembly hour Thursday morning.

The Oregon women's class basketball teams were winners of the three of the four intercollegiate class games with O. A. C., played in Corvallis last Saturday.

Ronald Reid, pianist, and John B. Seifert, tenor, of the school of music, will appear in a recital tonight in the Methodist church at 8 o'clock.

Two unmasked and unidentified men entered the University pharmacy late Saturday evening and robbed F. L. Keeny, manager, of approximately $200.

WINNERS TO BE DECIDED

Champion Basketeers Play for Cup; Trophy Will be Awarded

The championship game of the women's basketball series will be played between the senior first team and the freshmen, team 1, Thursday afternoon at 5 o'clock.

The team winning this game will come into possession of the basketball cup awarded annually for the champion class team. The trophy was presented in 1911 by Bill Hayward, and has been awarded 13 times. For the last two years, the graduating class has held it.

The game Thursday will be an exciting one, for the teams are evenly matched. When they met once before, a few weeks ago, the frosh defeated the seniors by a narrow margin. This will probably be the very best game of the women's basketball series, and all are invited.

gon lost one of her best hurling bets for the 1924 diamond campaign. Fuzzy left for the south the other day to start working out for the P. C. baseball season. With one season's experience behind him, the little portside ought to win quite a number of games for the Tigers. The Oregon mound staff is going to be slightly weak this season and Carson would have been a welcome addition.

Whitman is starting baseball practice already, despite inclement weather. Nig Borleske is handling the diamond artists at the Missionary school and he believes in getting an early start. Some of the Oregon men plan to work out in the near future. With coaches appointed, everything is ready for a fairly good year in baseball. Reinhart has a veteran nucleus to build around and some good looking material from last year's freshman team to fill in the weak spots.

Athletics are being hit rather hard at Syracuse this year. Some of the big guns of the eastern institution have been dismissed from school and others have been placed on probation, because of low scholastic standing. Nearly every sport has suffered, and still the faculty shows no signs of letting up.

At the Theatres

HEILIG
The perennial favorites, Kolb and Dill, without whom no theatrical year would be complete, are coming tonight to the Heilig in a new play by Aaron Hoffman, called "A Big Reward."

Kolb, the long, lean member of the team, plays Frederick Brandt, a gay "man about town," while Dill, his rōly-pōly associate in fun, is seen as a smart waiter in a big New York hotel. The eternal conflict throughout between the pair provides a maximum of laughter which continues during the entire play to a surprising climax.

"A Big Reward" is a crook story, given international flavor not only by the Dutch accent garishing the English of Kolb and Dill, but also by the fact that an internationally famous portair is being sought by numerous detectives. Kolb and Dill find themselves in hilarious dilemmas during the untangling of the mystery.

REX

Three in a row—and all big hits. That's the way Paramount turns out Zane Grey stories. Right on the heels of "To the Last Man" and "The Call of the Canyon," comes "The Heritage of the Desert," featuring Bebe Daniels, Ernest Torrence, Noah Beery and Lloyd Hughes. It's down at the Rex theater. Everyone read the story and everyone will want to see the picture which we believe to be even greater than the novel itself—if such a thing is possible. The final showings of "The Heritage of the Desert," at the Rex, will be held there today. The prologue featuring Johanna James occurs at 7:30 and 9:25 tonight.
