

GIFT MANAGERS MAIL POSTERS

Alumni to Get Pamphlets From Headquarters

OREGON GROWTH SHOWN

Second of Series Explains University Needs

The second number of a series of alumni posters has been sent out from headquarters by the managers of the gift campaign. There are seven issues of the posters, which vary from pamphlets to magazines with pictures of campus buildings and sketches of campus life.

"The object of this series of posters is to give the alumni all the information about the Oregon campus they want and to get them interested to a point where they will be willing to aid substantially in the campaign," said Glenn Quitt, publicity manager of the campaign.

Oregon Trail Is Theme

The first of the series was sent to the alumni two weeks ago. The first pamphlet was just an advance poster to arouse their curiosity and make them wonder what was in the air. It was a one-sheet pamphlet, telling of the trail-builders of the pioneer times, and described how they first settled Oregon and gave the state a start towards civilization. At the top and bottom of the sheet were pictures of covered wagons, winding across the plains. Upon the canvas of the wagons appeared the gift campaign secret number, 2-6-0.

Campus Sites Shown

The third of the series is in magazine form entitled, "Old Oregon." In it are innumerable pictures of the various campus buildings, favorite rooms in them and scenes of walks, and landmarks on the campus, including the shield in front of Villard hall, the pioneer and the "O" on Skinner's butte.

The fourth in the series of propaganda, is an invitation to the endowment dinner to be held for the alumni here on the campus. The next number is an explanation of the actual part to be taken by the alumni in the gift campaign, how much will be expected from each individual, and the payment plans to be used. It also divulges the secret of the campaign cry, 2-6-0.

National Drive to Follow

The seventh and last of the series is a pamphlet which will serve as a climax to the arguments used by the gift campaigners. It will urge the alumni to respect the duty they owe to their Alma Mater and request that they do all in their power to aid in the building drive.

Much of the same data of the series will be used in the national campaign which is to follow later.

ress in art is that of always reverting to the ancient.

"When a portrait of Henry Clay was modeled in civilian clothes and long trousers it was considered very bad taste because he was not in a Roman toga," Professor Fairbanks declared with a twinkle, when asked about the bobbed hair. "Art that is true to its day and generation in time becomes classical." And so he has portrayed youth as it is today.

PUBLIC SERVICE GIVEN BY EXTENSION DIVISION

Readiness of University to Put Resources at Command of State Lauded

By Edward Robbins

"In the field of public service, the University, through the extension division, has extended its usefulness in innumerable ways," said Dr. Dan E. Clark, assistant director of the extension work of the University, in a recent interview. "State-wide and local surveys, investigations of great and social importance, service of faculty members on various public boards and commissions, and as to expert advisers, participation in Red Cross work during the war, assistance and guidance in numerous campaigns for public welfare—these are illustrations of the constant willingness of the University to place its resources at the disposal of the commonwealth in any movement for political, economic, social or educational betterment."

"The extension division of the University of Oregon really dates from 1907 although the name itself was not applied until several years later," said Dr. Clark. "Oregon was in the forefront of the organized extension movement, while at the same time it entered late enough to profit by the experience of several other universities where the movement had already proved its value."

"Extension work at the University has been developed along conservative lines. That is to say, extension activities have developed in response to the needs and demands of the people of the state, rather than as promotion enterprises; and it has been the policy to engage only in those of the plaques. They returned with Professor Fairbanks to Portland yesterday, as did Mrs. Fairbanks, and Katie O. Schaefer.

Professor Fairbanks has announced that Miss Schaefer will take his place with the extension class and on the campus next year in his absence. Miss Schaefer, '18, is a graduate of the University of Oregon in rhetoric. During the past year she has assisted in the sculpture department, and has had a teaching position in the University high school.

At the basket banquet, which has become a jury day tradition in the Portland classes since the sculpture department was established three years ago, a number of the distinguished citizens of Portland were present and viewed the student work. The affair, which was held in the class rooms at 509 Deacon building, was an informal smock party.

only woke up once an hour to turn over.

"We could only spend one day at the coast, because we had to allow two days for returning," she went on, "so we decided to cover as much ground as possible. We made a hike of 22 miles up the coast to Otter Rock, taking in the Yaquina lighthouse and the marine gardens. The marine gardens are just below the point upon which the lighthouse is located and in order to see them, we had to be there when the tide was out. The purple sea urchins, green and coral anemones and orange star fish, along with the dark green sea-weed, produced a striking effect which made the gardens appear to have been artificially, rather than naturally, planted."

"At the hotel at Otter Rock, where we stopped for lunch, we met Miss Page and Miss Manchester of the school of physical education. We were certainly glad to stop at the hotel to get dry, as it rained a great deal of the time during the whole trip and even snowed up on the summit of the Coast range. We saw the Devil's Punch Bowl and the caves at Otter Rock and were there during high tide when the waves break against the rocks at a terrific pace."

"One of the most interesting experiences was a ride on a 'scooter' in a logging camp near Otter Rock. We happened to meet Bill Johnson, an ex-Oregon student, who is work-activities which resources of money and personnel made it possible to carry on in a reasonably adequate manner.

"From the organization of extension work in 1907 until the fall of 1913 correspondence study was the chief activity of the extension division. Extension classes were first organized in Portland in the fall of 1913, and four years later the Portland extension center was formally established by action of the regents of the University. From time to time, when resources permitted, extension classes were held in other cities in various parts of the state."

"The Oregon High School Debating league was organized in 1907 and has ever since been a successful extension activity of the University. "General extension lectures were first brought into an organized system in 1913, although University professors had given their services generously to the state in this way many years before that date."

"In 1914 at the request of the state superintendent of public instruction," continued Dr. Clark, "the extension division began the supervision of the reading circle work of a large portion of the teachers of the state, a service which has been continued to the present time."

"Visual instruction was inaugurated as a phase of the extension work in 1915 with a small collection of lantern slides, and motion picture films were added the following year. In the years which followed this service has been greatly expanded."

"We also met a real hobo. He told us about his 'hopping' freight trains and 'bumming' rides on the highway. We felt like hobo ourselves because we 'bummed' rides, too. We actually hiked between fifty and sixty miles. The rest of the time we got 'lifts.'"

FACULTY FISHERMAN LANDS 19-INCH TROUT

A trout, nineteen inches in length, was landed by Dr. R. H. Wheeler, of the psychology department, on a fishing trip with M. F. McLain, of the University Co-op, up the Willamette during the spring vacation. Eight other trout, over fifteen inches in length were caught by the two, but Dr. Wheeler's fish was the king of the catch.

Starting Saturday-morning, the two motored up the Willamette to a station called Eula. Here they pitched camp and prepared for two days of fishing. "The fishing was not very good, although we did get several fine ones," Dr. Wheeler said, when asked about the angling. "The wind was blowing, it rained most of the time, and it was very cold. There were only a few hours each day when fishing was at all enjoyable."

REBEC TO VISIT OTHER SCHOOLS

Dean Wants New Blood in Graduate Classes

INQUIRIES SENT OREGON

College Communication Is Held Desirable

Dr. George Rebec, dean of the graduate school, will leave Sunday for an extended trip through the western states, in the interest of the graduate school.

"It is of fundamental importance to a graduate school, that it not be recruited by the inbreeding of its own graduates," said Dr. Rebec. "It is especially important that the positions of graduate and research assistants be in large part recruited from outside sources. All matters of practical points of administration as well as ideals likewise call for adequate intercommunication among institutions."

Oregon Has Obligations

Dr. Rebec also pointed out that from among faculty members of lesser colleges and oftentimes larger institutions, inquiries come as to the possibilities and opportunities of graduate work at the University of Oregon. The University is under obligation to function towards higher education in Oregon, as well as in the Northwest, and the country as a whole. It should encourage the ambitious endeavors of collegiate teaching bodies towards self equipment. During the regular terms of the graduate school, and even more in summer terms, members of the staffs of college and normal schools are joining high school teachers, superintendents, principals and fresh college graduates who make up the growing graduate student body of Oregon.

Dr. Rebec wishes, therefore, to bring the graduate work of summer sessions to the attention of its appropriate constituency, and to meet that constituency in personal conference in order to get as much as possible of needed information.

Many Schools to be Visited

The institutions that he expects to visit are: Whitman college at Walla Walla; Washington State college at Pullman; University of Idaho at Moscow; University of Montana at Missoula; Montana State College of Agriculture and the Mechanic Arts at Bozeman; and Helena college at Helena, Montana. From Helena, he will travel south to Utah, where he will visit the University of Utah at Salt Lake City and Brigham Young university. From Salt Lake City he will proceed to the University of Wyoming and Nevada, whence inquiries about graduate studies and appointments to graduate assistantships have been coming for the last two or three years. On the final lap, Dr. Rebec expects to stop at Berkeley, to obtain various useful and practical notes, as well as to meet one of the graduate students who comes to Oregon from the University of California.

Dr. Rebec is unable to state how much time this trip will require. He will leave Sunday and be in Portland for a conference of graduate and faculty members of the Portland medical school.

BASKETBALL LETTERS AWARDED U. H. S. MEN

Seven basketball letters were awarded at the University high school this year. The men who won letters are Ridings, Powers, Hemy, Fields, Hays, Leslie, and Hanks. Coach Webster gave out the letters the week just preceding spring vacation.

Three of the seven lettermen will graduate this year. Powers, who was all-state guard last year, and one of the most dependable men this season, has played his last game for University high. Fields, who played center this spring. Ridings, who was a dependable point-maker this year, will be back next year, and with the three other lettermen and others who played but didn't make their letters, will form the nucleus of the squad next year.

JOURNALISM LEADERS ADDRESS HIGH SCHOOL

Dean Eric W. Allen, head of the school of journalism, and Arthur Rudd, editor of the Emerald, spoke before a large class of journalism students at Eugene high school Friday morning.

Dean Allen gave the "preppers" some detailed instruction on news-writing and publication work generally. He also conducted a brief discussion of the Eugene high school newspaper.

The Emerald editor made general observations on high school publications and then gave a description of the work in the Oregon school of journalism. A short description of how the Emerald is issued was also given and an invitation extended to the youthful journalists to visit the journalistic headquarters on the campus.

Best Methods of Spending Weekends Are at Obak's Kollege Klub

The best way of spending a lovely Friday or Saturday evening is by collecting a group of associates and carrying on a pool tournament at Obak's Kollege Klub. For a maximum of pleasure at a minimum of expenditure, there is nothing that will equal such an evening.

Long ago, University men learned that one of the most enjoyable parts of such an evening is that time spent at the snow-white lunch counter that has made Obak's famous for its good eats. Coffee and the things that go with it that will make you feel like a new man. Fine fresh sandwiches made for the hungry man, delicious pies, cakes and pastries that satisfy, these things can always be had at Obak's.

Of course, Obak's has long been the headquarters for smokers of all kinds, because here you can find a stock of tobaccos that would please the most particular man. It would be hard to name a brand of cigarette or tobacco that isn't to be found on Obak's shelves.

Have you ever noticed the picture gallery displayed on the walls. There you will find all of the championship teams of years gone by. You will be able to see for yourself the photograph of famous athletes that you have heard about. All in all, Obak's Kollege Klub is just naturally a College man's paradise.

There will also be elections for the officers of Obak's Kollege Klub for the coming year. From now on, there will be a meeting of all the college men at Obak's to discuss the possible candidates. These impromptu discussions are held around the billiard and pool tables and at the lunch counter. Be sure and drop in get the dope.
