COMMUNITY GROWTH WILL BE STIMULATED

School of Sociology Will Record District
Development, Using Filing System

Eighty communities of Oregon, through their teachers, have entered into the community development plan which is being conducted by the sociology school of the University, and have sent in descriptions of their respective communities. This is the first step in a statewide project which proposes to collect data on all Oregon communities with a view to stimulate community growth, and establish the foundation for future history of the state.

The arrival of community score cards, from the federal department of citizenship training, will aid greatly in collecting the required data. These are booklets containing numerous questions relative to the size, business organizations, public institutions, community clubs and other lines of development of the community. At first a questionnaire is sent to a teacher in the community, asking the names of the public institutions, and whether the community would be interested in the development project. If so, a map of the community is sent to them, and also one of the score cards, which enters the subject much more deeply, and obtains more specific information on the district.

This data will be compiled and kept in a filing system at the University, and duplicate filing systems are to be kept in the various communities. From time to time, further reports will be made by each community, and added to the file, so that an accurate account of the development and growth of the districts can be obtained up to date.

This plan, when well under way, will be of great benefit, not only to the communities themselves, but also to economists and historians. It will show the communities the tendencies of their own growth and will give them an opportunity to compare their progress with that of other districts. Economists and historians will be able, in the future, to put their hands immediately, on any district in Oregon, obtain its complete history and development from the present time, together with the numerous other points of interest the data might contain. Acting on this hypothesis, Dean F. G. Young, head of the school of sociology, who is in charge of the project, is endeavoring to enlist the aid of the Oregon historical society, and is practically certain that his request will be granted. Oregon is the first state of the union to commence such a development project, Dean Young said, and will probably be followed by other states in the near future.

If the plans work out as they are expected, maps of the communities will be made at intervals, by airplane, thus giving the community in compact form. State conventions will probably be held at the University or at other places, where delegates from the communities will gather to discuss topics of importance to community development.

tion with the faculty was discussed and Dean May Jost, of Stanford university, spoke on "The University as a Community." She stressed particularly the fact that students in the university were no longer high school students and as college students, should concede to the faculty and the faculty to the students, for the students should have some control.

Means of making the unsocial girl a part of the campus were discussed, and many methods of getting acquainted were advanced. Some of the smaller colleges hold initiations for all freshmen women, while most of the colleges hold annual pageants, stunt shows, and masquerades for the women students. In some schools a point system is kept through a card index of activities and girls are urged to go out for the things in which they are interested.

Honor societies were discussed and the consensus of opinion was in favor of departmental societies which foster the work of the departments, and senior honoraries, but underclass honoraries societies were considered a matter for the individual colleges and were disapproved of by some schools.

Resolutions passed at the conference were that:

1. The big sister-little sister organizations be directed by Women's leagues in all colleges.
2. The conference go on record as disapproving of smoking for women on the campus.
3. All women's leagues sponsor the establishment of honor systems.

Resolutions suggested by the conference of deans and adopted by the conference are:

plan whereby they could raise money for a Student Union, without paying a cent of cash. "You reckon as how it might be done?"

"I doesn't reckon nothin' else," Mr. Johnings, came from the minstrel addressed as he ostentatiously unwound his elongated limbs and drew a ripple of laughter over the house. "Jes cogitate a second, I asks you Mistah Interlocutor. Heah we have two hundred thousand dollars to raise and fo' days to raise it. Now the whole case organizes itself 'round only one centripetal proposition. In other words, to raise or not to raise, that's the "quod erat demonstrandum" of the whole hellavamus."

"To continue, if we raise the funds, we don't get the money, cause everybuddy's broke. They ain't a cent can be taken away from our grandiloquent audience now. I reckon as how they'll be things flyin' about our ears when this performance is over, cause the students have paid their shekels for such outrageous perfidiosis.

OREGON KNIGHTS NAME CONVENTION DELEGATE

Charles Norton Will Go to Meet at Pullman

Charles Norton, stunt duke of the Oregon Knight chapter of the Intercollegiate Knights, was elected in the meeting last night as the chapter's delegate to the national convention to be held in Pullman, Washington, on May 2 and 3. This is the first convention of the intercollegiate knights.

Haddon Rockey, general chairman of the student loan drive, gave a spirited talk on the benefits of the organization to the campus at last night's meeting. He briefly gave the high points of the part the Oregon Knights will play in the approaching student loan drive.

The weekly paddle sessions on the library steps for breakers of Oregon traditions will be continued until the freshmen get rid of their green lids on Junior Week-end. Closer checking will be done—and unruly freshmen will be punished by the library steps route.
