On Living Through the Week

He was young—but he was earnest. He credited his candidate with all the things he ever did and several that he didn't do. His candidate, beyond all doubt, was the "man for the place." He "had a man in mind" all right,—very much in mind, in fact, yet—the chances are he had never known that man very well before but in the heat of the occasion he felt very strongly for "the one who can lead Oregon on to better things."

This and more was in evidence at assembly yesterday morning. Psychology students and teachers must have enjoyed a real treat watching the campus mind work, how the various speakers, with a few creditable exceptions—parroted one another, how through much of it there was a sort of adolescent seriousness that was often a little amusing.

After all, students, the University will continue to run even though your favorite candidate is not elected. After all, student office holders do things pretty much as the administration plans that they should do them. There is a certain importance, of course, in choosing wisely. To do this in every use would mean forgetting popularity and remembering capacities—this, of course, is a vain hope that could never be realized as long as folks are folks. But getting back to the point we had in mind at first—let's not get too worked up over politics, let's not suspect people of "dirty politics" just because we see student A. from X. Y. Z. fraternity talking (probably about a class assignment) to an Eta Zeta friend.

But let's remember most what President Robinson said at the beginning of the nominating assembly, "When it's over—forget it—and all work together for Oregon."

Older students, especially those who have been connected with earlier campaigns, have to smile a little at the annual furor that strikes on the campus about this time of year. Their advice is: "Hold steady—and may the best man win."

The Emerald Aisle

By Enigma

Said Peter last evening, "Boss, did you ever see anything like it? When a frosh wanders from his fold, he seems to find it convenient to break all the rules he ever learned in college—green hat minus, smoking on the campus and library dates, plus.

DON'T YOU SEE? AND, BOSS, I HAVE WRITTEN THE ANTICS OF ONE FROSH I WITNESSED SOME TIME AGO.

THE TRAGEDY OF A JOVIAL BOY

By PETER, the office spark
Part I

He was a gallant lad. His appearance gave away his realization that he had not spent his 18 years in vain. No, far from vain. Perhaps the last three years or so were spent in vanity—but not in vain.

Anyway, on this occasion, our hero is seen by unseen eyes. The atmosphere is black with nightness. A reproduction of the ancient light from the ark of Noah twinkles at the intersection.

With its aid, a row of mysterious Greek letters with invisible meaning are visible, glittering behind the stumpy form of our hero. Beneath him, in agony, lies a fraternal flight of steps. Above him, and slightly aslant, rests, in derision, an oval, greenish, spot of green felt.

But now what is afoot! Our hero moves stealthily on toward the halls of educational origin. And as he penetrates the darkness of the campus green, fire issues from his hands, then smoke from his mouth!

AH! HE HAS WALKED HIS MILE. HE HAS FOUND HIS CAMEL.

Suddenly, as if in answer to the groans of a steaming kettle, he skins the green lid from off the domicile of neglected knowledge. Of no avail. The denseness within remains within.

BUT HIS PURPOSE HAS BEEN MISINTERPRETED. HE IS GAY. HE IS ROSY. HE IS JOICUNDITY ITSELF. HIS ACTIONS WERE BUT THE RESULTS OF AN INWARD FEELING OF NECESSARY FREEDOM.

Onto the college campus green Our hero freshman swoops, Enjoying an air of freedom Away from the college groups.

When, out from the shadows of dear old Dedy, Comes a seniorish form, both old and seedy.

The frosh, with movement Like lightning, so speedy, Drops down behind a black old stump, And in his throat 'pears a big, round lump.

On into the night the senior passes. The frosh shoots on toward "library classes!"

And as he approaches the famous clearing house of social education, the green spot reappears, the smoke ceases to issue from his mouth. He has finally reached the end of the desert—he is through with his camel.

HE MOUNTS THE STEPS OF BLOOD AND SLAUGHTER. BRAVELY, HE ENTERS THE CHAMBER OF A THOUSAND ROMANCES, AND LOOKS ABOUT HIM. BUT,

What is a story without its love? Or what are hills without sky above? (I'd forgotten to arrange this thing that way, So I'll have to think of some more to say.)

(To be continued tomorrow.)

The first of the month is here again. To some it will be merely the first of May, while to others, less fortunate, it will mean another scramble to pay bills contracted in April. Running bills now days is a luxury few who really appreciate the difference, care to afford. As a basis for figuring, take the items listed below and check them off against the prices charged on your April bill—you will probably be astounded at the difference.
