

BOOKLET ADVERTISES ALLIED ARTS SCHOOL

Illustrations Show Work Done by Students

A survey of the school of architecture and allied arts has been made in a booklet, six by nine inches, just off the University Press.

A full-page cut of the school of architecture and allied arts shows the sculpture panel above the door of the west entrance to the Arts building, the colonettes of the court, and the stained glass panels, all work of the students.

Architectural design, life drawing, sketching in the court, the school gallery and museum, a student engaged in modeling, a girl at work on a hand loom, tiles completed by the normal arts department, even a still life—all are portrayed.

LIBRARY OBTAINS SETS BY FAMOUS AUTHORS

Several sets of books have recently been purchased by the library, which will soon be added to the general circulation department.

A unique book entitled "Le Morte de Arthur," by Sir Thomas Mallory, is also among the newest purchases of the library.

'OLD OREGON' TO HAVE THREE BOOK REVIEWS

Critiques Survey Stories of College Life

That three reviews of books of interest to college students appear in the May issue of "Old Oregon," was the announcement from the alumni office yesterday.

Another report, by Pat Morrisette, takes up "The Education of four years there as John Wiley,

"Mac" "Jack" Varsity Barber Shop The Old Reliables 11th and Alder

Peter," a story of Yale college life. It is the record of "Peter's" the author, graduated in '21, the life presented is contemporaneous with that of college life now.

"Fidelia," by Edwin Balmer, well-known novelist, is being reviewed by Frances Morse. This is Miss Morse's first contribution to "Old Oregon." This novel was published serially in Hearst's, but the ending was changed from the original. It is a story of Chicago college life in Northwestern university, as is also "Grey Towers," a recent book.
