Junior Week-end—a Success

Junior Week-end without guests was undoubtedly a success. It is doubtful if the campus would ever submit to reinstating another annual prepper invasion. As a play-time, when Oregon got to gether in friendly spirit, it was a distinct addition to the spirit of the campus. Even the very recent petty election squabbles were forgotten and there was a distinct feeling of brotherhood evident in the fact that we were all Oregonians together.

Oregon students are noted in many quarters as being "pinch hitters." Time after time when situations have looked black and when campus events seemed doomed to failure those in charge came through to the last minute. Professors say the same thing is true in scholastic endeavor. The best work is always done on term themes or problems just before the time to hand them in.

Junior Week-end went over in just that way. It looked as though the lack of guests to show off before was going to kill our great spring festival. Calamity-howlers were everywhere, and their yelps made the work doubly hard. The time drew near, and what happened? Pinch hitting, of course. The Junior class hit things and hit them hard. Eddie Tapfer, chairman of the Week-end, worked day and night in order that things might be a success. Don Woodward, class president, proved his judgment as an executive in his choice of the directorate personnel.

The outstanding feature of the week-end was, of course, the Prom. Nothing like the Prom has ever been seen on this campus. Every detail to make it a successful affair was taken care of. To Mary Hathaway goes the honor of directing the most beautiful social function that Oregon has ever seen. To outstanding committee members, such as Edgar Bohlman and his artistic talent, who worked with her, and a group of hard-working assistants, must also go much credit.

The smoothness which marked the running off of the other Junior Week-end events is a credit to the class. Hesden Metcalf, who directed the canoe fete; Maude Schroeder, head of the campus luncheon; Sam Cook, who conducted campus day activities; and Gordon Wilson, who took care of the athletic events, were all factors in this success of the class of '25. The earlier Vod-vil success was due largely to Dave Swanson and Don Parks.

To these heads named, and especially to the general chairman, honor is due. If we could know the intimate details of how Junior Week-end was put over, there would be others who would come in for recognition. It is very often the case that some obscure committee members make as great a sacrifice of time and effort as any of the leaders. To them also we express appreciation. In realizing that one receives in return as much as one puts into any worthy enterprise, they have their reward.

SOUVENIRS FROM PURDUE

ARE SENT TO PRESIDENT

Judge C. E. Henderson, who was the University's representative at the semi-centennial celebration of the founding of Purdue university, has sent to the president's office several souvenirs of that occasion. Among these are the order of exercise, a plan of the campus, and information for delegates. This celebration was held at Lafayette, Indiana, during May 1, 2, 3. At this time Judge Henderson was presented to the president of Purdue and took part in other ceremonies.

The Emerald Aisle

By Enigma

Yesterday, as I happened to walk past the mirror in my bedroom, I began to think of myself. And the sensation was certainly a peculiar one, because, for some reason, I had never happened to think of myself before.

I HAVE ALWAYS THOUGHT OF OTHERS.

But now I realize that according to my theory of life, I have been doing myself a grave injustice. Because—all men are created equal.

SO I'M GOING TO TURN OVER A NEW LEAF AND PAY MORE ATTENTION TO MYSELF AFTER THIS.

In fact, some day, I think I'll devote a whole column just to myself. In this column I shall explain gently but forcibly just what I think of me.

THEN THE NEXT MORNING I SHALL WALK OVER TO THE EDITOR'S OFFICE, GET AN EMERALD, AND READ WHAT I HAD TO SAY ABOUT MYSELF.

As I read I shall suddenly become most horribly enraged, whereupon I shall rise and straightway write myself a stinging communication telling what a degrading character I am and what useless blather I write.

Yes, I might even be so far beyond my own personal control as to poke myself in the eye, or even worse—stab myself with a blouey knife. And then,

I WOULDN'T HAVE TO WRITE ANY MORE COLUMNS. OSKO-WEIE!!

Weekend memories remind us, Co-eds' pockets are the bunk, So you see the dances find us Loaded down with all their junk.

RECENT DEVELOPMENTS—

THE AFTERMATH

"Did you really vote for me, old man?"
"Yes, I was the one. Where's that coke?"

WHEN THE OREGON KNIGHT

RIDES DOWN THE GRAIL

Isn't he handsome? Where is his mighty sword? Hasn't he any? Doesn't he Lancelot?

The campus auction Fords are making ready for spring now. Some of them are even having their chokers taken off.

"The spring is here!" That's what she said as the leather ripped in the back seat of a prominent campus Ford.

Did you ever hear a faculty member say, "I was so frightened that my heart was in my mouth?" I have. And I couldn't help but wonder why this particular one didn't have some broken teeth.

At the Theatres

CASTLE

Broadway, the "street of streets" on which is enacted half of America's drama of life, is elaborately pictured in "Broken Hearts of Broadway," an Irving Cummings production featuring Colleen Moore and Johnnie Walker, which is at the Castle today for the last time.

The struggles and heartbreaks of those who woo fame in the great metropolis are vividly pictured in "Broken Hearts of Broadway," which marks the entry of Cummings, formerly a noted leading man and star, into the ranks of the great independent producers.

REX

"Half-a-Dollar-Bill," a new Metro picture, opened yesterday at the Rex theater, where its reception by crowded audiences indicates a successful engagement. Indeed, "Half-a-Dollar-Bill" has every popular element to insure favor. It is a sea story, and the author, Curtis Benton, has given it a novel twist. The four-year-old boy actor, Frankie Darro, gives a sympathetic and exceptional performance in the title role of a little waif who is nicknamed after a torn dollar bill that was pinned to him when he was abandoned.

Special matters to come at the weekly business meeting this week will be on the house party planned for next weekend, and the matter of a senior breakfast to be held May 24. All members are urged to be present.
