The King Is Dead. Long Live the King

Villard hall has seen a great many events of importance in the history of the University. Yesterday the passing of another milestone in Oregon's progress was noted when the student-body officers of the year 1923-24 stepped down from positions of power and responsibility to be replaced by new figures.

The passing of a student administration is always accompanied by sadness. Each year sees some who have given so much time and effort for their fellow-students, forgotten, almost before the time of graduation comes. To have it any other way, however, would be without value, for each administration in adding its bit to the sum total of campus accomplishment, passes on, rewarded with broadening of personalities, and the satisfaction of having returned something for what Oregon has given them.

The retiring administration has a very special accomplishment to its credit. The successful conclusion of the Student Union drive, which in turn has added great impetus to the gift campaign as a whole, is a real monument to the outgoing workers. Had it not been for the personality and the good judgment of the A. S. U. O. president, no such organization as was perfected could have been possible.

Administration and Student Interest

It is an encouraging sign to know that Oregon's new student-body executive has already immersed himself deeply in the problems which will confront his administration next year.

His inaugural address before the assembly yesterday was an evidence of sincere thought and of careful judgment. While the limit of time prevented Mr. Jones from developing fully some of his points, the student body was assured that its new leader has its interests at heart and will work continuously for the good of all concerned.

The new president rightfully saw in the athletic situation a problem which must have immediate attention. He is right in announcing that his policy will enable every student to be heard. It is only by the cooperation of every student that the idea of a greater Oregon can be fully realized.

Although student-body administration and student-body finances are in the hands of students, it is a fact that because of the rush of campus life and because of inexperience, the student council, the executive council and their various committees must take the words of the older heads, such as the graduate manager and the faculty and alumni advisers, in shaping the policy of their activity.

Experience with these older heads has proved that they have the interests of Oregon at heart and without their advice A. S. U. O. affairs would be much more difficult to handle.

Mistakes are possible, however, even in the case of experienced persons. They do not always see the student point of view as clearly as do the student members of the governing bodies. This means that to be entirely successful student officeholders must give real thought to their work, must be ready to defend their opinions, rather than submissively acquiesce to anything proposed, merely because they have no time to investigate.

The new student officials have assumed a real responsibility. With Randall Jones as their leader they must continue the straightforward course of the men who have gone before. They should stand always for student interests. They should not permit the wails of temperamental activity boosters to cause an overbalancing of expenditures toward one activity, nor should they permit the size of the A. S. U. O. debt to frighten them into cutting down so far that any activity will be permanently injured. The weight must be on the side of economy, however, for until Oregon's debts are paid the student body can never advance as it should.

The new administration has our best wishes. Its problems will be many. There will be all too little credit for the work and worry that the positions will demand. The least that the student body can do is to cooperate.

Today Marks Final Time to Arrange Breakfast Dates

Today is the last chance for the junior women to make their dates with the senior women which will be held in the Woman's building at 8:30 o'clock tomorrow morning. For the annual senior breakfast, those girls living in town are asked to get tickets at the Y. W. bungalow and to look on the list in the library for changes with names.

The breakfast is one of the biggest affairs of the year for the University women, and is given by the campus Young Women's Christian association. Special music is to be given by campus musicians. The feature of the event, which the committee has not announced, is said to be unusually good. Toasts will be given by leaders of the association and other persons prominent in the association work.

Each junior woman is expected to call for the senior woman allotted to her, and take the latter to the breakfast. Neva Service and Muriel Paul, assisted by a corps of workers, constitute the committee arranging the breakfast.
