

YEAR PLAN HELD UNSATISFACTORY

Work in Office not Reduced, Claims Registrar

COURSES ARE CHANGED

Faculty, Student Opinion Found to be Divided

Taking the whole year into consideration, the year registration plan does not lessen the work of the registrar's office, in the opinion of Carlton E. Spencer, registrar. "It seems difficult for students in collaboration with their advisers to make out their programs for the year satisfactorily," says Mr. Spencer. "Before registration day was over students were calling for the change in course blanks."

Extra Work Involved
Every change in course involves a revision of the program on file in the office, which results in extra work for the clerks, points out the registrar.

"Some faculty members think the year plan an improvement, and some think it a disadvantage," said Mr. Spencer. Students also seem divided in opinion, some reported to the office that it greatly facilitated matters, whereas just as many students said it made registration much harder.

"This office is planning to give each student at the opening of the winter term a copy of his program so he will know in just what courses he is enrolled. This will cause more work for the registrar but will help the student greatly."

"We are glad to undergo additional work in the hope that in the course of time the year program idea will become established and the students and advisers will become accustomed to seeing a year ahead," stated Mr. Spencer.

The year plan is good in theory, and if the work can be so organized as to get the right courses made out on the program, the plan will be successful, Mr. Spencer thinks.

Semester Plan Better
"The three-term system makes it harder for the success of the plan because it is possible for the student to drop out at the end of each term, which causes difficulties for both the advisor and the student in the registration for the coming year," the registrar continued.

The two-term, or semester plan, he contended, would make the year plan much easier to work out to a successful end. In the first place, he said, not so many students would drop out during the year. Then there would be less chance for wrong combinations of term courses in the programs for the two-semester year.

OREGON TEAM PROVES CALIBER IN CONTEST

considerable mention. Jones carried the ball twice as much as any other man in the backfield, and if there was not a hole opened for him, there was a hole after Jones hit the line. This is Lynn Jones' first year playing varsity football, and with a little more coaching, Jones will attract the attention of many coast sport critics. Vitus, another new man in the backfield, will prove to be a valuable man to Maddock. His line bucking showed real promise and with a little more experience under his belt, Vitus will be a hard man to stop. Anderson and Terjensen both played a good game.

As it should be, no man stood out brilliantly in the line, but the Oregon line as a whole stood out very well, and proved to be a stumbling block to the Badgers.

Kicker is Needed
When Oregon plays Stanford, George Minnaugh may be a necessary cog in the Oregon backfield. Minnaugh, although not an exceptional punter, can get off a respectable kick. And in a game with a team like the Cardinals, a consistent booter will be a distinct asset.

If the men injured on the Oregon squad improve before the Stanford contest, Maddock will be aided considerably by having some good reserve material which will speed up and strengthen the Oregon offense. In looking over the results of other football games played over the week-end, the most surprising result is from the Multnomah-O. A. C. game. It is well known that the Clubmen have a good aggregation, however the Aggies also are supposed to have a powerful team. But the Aggies made a very poor showing against the Portland team. They were outplayed and appeared very weak and only due to a 55 yard run were the Aggies able to nose out Multnomah.

Washington lived up to its reputation and in an easy fashion ran up a 55-0 score. The Huskies have proven that they have a machine that has a surprising scoring ability. A team that can score 110 points in two successive games is a team that has an exceptional amount of real power.

Olympic Holds Stanford
Stanford experienced some difficulty in their contest with the Olympic club. The final score was 7-7. However the Cardinals were without the services of Ernie Nevers and with the first conference game for Stanford but a week away, "Pop" Warner used this game to but test the ability of his reserve men. Stanford expects to defeat Oregon with little trouble but they also expect to work hard for their victory.

When Washington State ran up an impressive score against Pacific, the Cougars were classed as a coming team, but their defeat at the hands of Gonzaga gave the Pullman team quite a setback. If one were to judge by the dope sheet, W. S. C. and Idaho could both be classed together as to strength. However the majority of credit goes to Houston Stockton for the defeat of the Cougars. Stockton's passing ability and his defensive work were the main causes for the downfall of W. S. C.

The coming Saturday really opens the Coast conference race. By the end of the week the coming teams will be easily recognized by their showing in the opening games. Whether Oregon is absolutely out of the race will depend largely on what kind of showing the varsity makes against the strongest team on the coast, Stanford. Oregon may develop into an annoying factor for pennant contenders but all this depends on the outcome of Saturday's contest.
