Man From Monkey?

A MAN who wields perhaps as great an influence on public opinion as any man in America spent the last summer touring the country, speaking in churches and public gatherings. The thesis of his verbal broadcasts was, "Abolish the teaching of evolution in the schools."

Had William Jennings Bryan said instead, "Abolish the preaching of evolution in the schools," his plea might deserve credence. Abolish the teaching of anything that causes people to think, and to doubt? No. That, carried to its consummation, would demand the abolition of schools—of education.

Mr. Bryan witnessed and was alarmed by the same spectacle at which many other fundamentalists have, witnessing, been alarmed. He saw young men and women, brought up in Christian surroundings and taught the Christian viewpoint of life, suddenly appear to lose this viewpoint, to recant their former beliefs, when they ran afoul of evolution and its sister doctrines in colleges and universities.

Once more, had Mr. Bryan said, "Abolish the preaching of evolution," or, "Abolish the preaching of anything," he would, in the writer's opinion, be deserving of support. Universities should preach nothing. Plasticity being one of the chief traits of the adolescent mind, educators tread on dangerous ground when they attempt to play the part of the potter and shape these minds according to their individual whim. The frequent result of such shaping is malformation.

Education, in its highest conception, should have as its end the imparting of knowledge, and the creation of open-mindedness. Neither evolution nor fundamentalism should be preached, although both should be taught. If, after looking at life through the glasses of the religious fundamentalist, the student chooses to cast aside his Gods and assume instead the mechanistic viewpoint of life, must we say that evolution is wrong—or that religion is wrong? No.

Teachers should teach,—not preach. There are others who are paid to do that.—L. K. B.

A Friend of Oregon

ANOTHER of those acts which characterize loyal Oregon spirit is credited to Mr. C. H. Mimnaugh, Portland lumberman, in the interest of a former Oregon gridiron hero. Mr. Mimnaugh is arranging for a special delivery service of the returns of the Oregon-O. A. C. game, play by play, for "Tiny" Shields, who is kept in bed suffering from a lingering illness. "Tiny," who has a brother now playing on the varsity, is keenly interested in the outcome of all Oregon grid contests, and Mr. Mimnaugh, unknown to "Tiny," has arranged for this special service so that he may be thrilled at the play as much as the very fans at Corvallis.

Thoughtfulness of this type is sincerely appreciated by Oregon students, who are quick to admire and respect such acts of kindness done by men interested in the development of college athletics.—W. W.

Communications

Letters to the EMERALD from students and faculty members are welcomed, but must be signed and worded concisely. If it is desired, the writer's name will be kept out of print. It must be understood that the editor reserves the right to reject communications.

Dean Hale Makes Statement

Editor Emerald: I am informed that the agent for an encyclopedia, who has been working in the University community, has circulated the report that I have subscribed for a set of the books. In order that no one may be misled by this report I wish to state publicly that it is false. I have not purchased and do not intend to purchase the set of books in question.

WILLIAM G. HALE.

Vagaries

(By Gosh)

"What are you putting that stuff in your column for? It's not very hot, I don't think," said my illustrious roommate. "Put the kind of stuff in that would best appeal to the average sort of fellow!" But I was firm. "Once and for all, illustrious roommate, I will tell you that there's not going to be any pornography in this column." So that settled that.

"1885" shouts the senior bench in thick paint—1885—1885—1885. Scrub it off again. 1899—1900—1901—it continues. 1901—1908—1912—1915—1921—1926 — 1928 — 1930—1950, says the reduced remnant "1999," mumble the last few crumbs of bedaubed concrete.

Yesterday my best friend got killed; today a capless fly fell into my cup of hot tea, was scalded and drowned.

If Bryan is still unconvinced about evolution he should attend a yelling rally, or listen to the crowd at the game where hoarse-roaring voices scream: Oskie Wow Wow.

MADDOCK IS HONORED BY MICHIGAN ALUMNI

The Michigan alumni of the upper Willamette valley gave a banquet in honor of Joe Maddock last night at the Hotel Albany, in Albany.

"Joe Maddock was a Michigan man and a player on the Michigan football team at the time he was there," said E. O. Immel, in speaking of the affair. The dinner was given, he continued, "in recognition of the work he has done at Oregon and the splendid way in which he has developed the Oregon team."

The committee in charge of the banquet was R. C. Brewster, manager of the Mountain States Power company of Albany, Arthur Clark, of Corvallis; and E. O. Immel of Eugene.

MR. AND MRS. H. K. COOKE PARENTS OF DAUGHTER

Word was received Thursday from Mr. and Mrs. Horace K. Cooke, St. Helens, Oregon, of the birth of a daughter, named Elaine Estelle. Both Mr. and Mrs. Cooke are former students of the University and of the class of '24. Mrs. Cooke was formerly Estelle Vadnais.

JOURNAL SPORTS EDITOR SENDS CUT TO EMERALD

The photo of the Oregon line, reproduced on the first page of the Emerald, was secured through the cooperation of Mr. George Bertz, sports editor of the Oregon Journal. Mr. Bertz sent the cut down with the best wishes of the Journal for Oregon success.

EDITOR OF HELIG PAPER SELLS AUTO TRADE STORY

A trade journalism story describing the use of a Fordson tractor on the University campus has been sold to Ford Owner and Dealer, of Milwaukee, Wisconsin, by George H. Godfrey, senior in the school of journalism. Godfrey is editor of Helig Newsvvents, monthly publication of the Helig theatre, and was a member of the first trade journalism class under Mr. Casey.
