

"EMERALD INK" ISSUE DELAYED FOR TERM

"Emerald Ink," the thirty-two page monthly magazine which was originally scheduled to appear this term at Homecoming, has been held up in the printing shop, due to a series of unlooked-for obstacles. It has been necessary to place the date of the first publication as the second week of the winter term.

Delay first arose in procuring permission to change from the Sunday Emerald, printed once a week, to the new form issued every thirty days. Following this, much more time was lost in obtaining permission from the Eugene merchants to solicit advertising for the publication.

A great deal of material has been turned in, and some of it approaches professional quality. Most of the literary sections have been set up in type ready for the press, according to the editors.

Mythical Northwest Grid Squad Picked By Emerald Dopsters

(Continued from page one) been to a large extent responsible for Gonzaga going through the present season without a defeat. Houston Stockton has really been the whole offense of this little college eleven, and Stockton on any other team would be a valuable ace, so a mythical northwest would hardly be complete without Stockton as one of the halfbacks. George Wilson of Washington, would ably hold down the other halfback position.

The reasons for putting Lynn Jones in as fullback are in a certain respect rather obvious. Jones is a regular "plunging-tractor" for going through the opposition's line and when yardage is needed, Jones is the man to carry the ball. Tesreau of Washington would be a valuable asset to a mythical eleven, but due to his steady gains, Jones would probably fill the gap in a better fashion.

"When better lines are made, Oregon will have them," for the varsity line this year will go down in history as the invincible wall that held the powerful Huskies for four downs on the one-spot line. It is the same line that held the battering attacks of the Aggie backs on the five-yard line last Saturday. This line before a mythical all-star backfield, would probably handle the offensive and defensive work as well as any other combination.

Perhaps, however, one might substitute a few of the Oregon line-men, not because the new recruits are of superior ability, but more because these new men have had a better advantage to display their ability in a more spectacular manner.

Vesser Picked for End Vesser of Idaho at end has made a very creditable showing this year which warrants him a place as end on the "eleven." Quinn, also of Idaho has played a fairly consistent game and would be a valuable man on any northwest team as tackle. Chalmer Walters of Washington, is a hard man to beat as a center, although Walters played very poorly against Oregon, but Gordon Wilson is a close contender for the same position. Stevens, of Idaho, as one of the guards, would hold down this position in a very capable manner, although Gene Shields could probably do as effective work as Stevens. Bellman fills the other position of guard by a very slim margin. McRae of Washington, team-mate of Bellman, really played a better game than Bellman against Oregon, but on account of his all around record, Bellman is the better man of the two.

Mautz, the hero of the Oregon-Aggie clash, has little competition as end. Mautz's record is explanation for his selection on the Emerald mythical eleven. Captain Dick Reed would be a capable and fighting tackle on this team. Reed, Petrie and Dickerson are about equal in ability, but Reed would probably work better as tackle in this line-up than the other two men.

College Thoughts Among the Co-eds

Scientists were busy talking of Mars. But Sue and I talked of cars. Sue thought of a nice "six" machine Done in mauve or possibly green. I thought of a splendid glittering "eight" Costing maybe five thousand straight. And then we both were so awfully busy, We compromised on a second-hand Lizzy. With rattles and bangs and nuts galore. And Mars went by as it had before Keeping with earth its eternal run. But Sue and I had a lot of fun.

GRADUATE IN JOURNALISM RETURNS HERE FOR VISIT

Mrs. T. D. Upton, (Bernice Ely), '16, former school of journalism student, is now visiting her mother in Eugene. Mrs. Upton, after leaving the campus, was employed on the Puyallup Valley Tribune, and served as city editor on that paper for over a year. In 1920 she entered chautauqua work, where she met Mr. Upton. He is a lecturer at present on the Redpath Chautauqua circuit. Mrs. Upton's home is in Muskegon, Michigan, where she will return next year.
