

LIBRARIAN WILL TALK FOR RADIO BROADCAST

'Christmas Books' is Theme Of Address From KGW

That one should buy good books for his friends and relatives for Christmas presents, rather than small miscellaneous unnecessary things, like 'bobbies, handkerchiefs, pipes, and cigars, is the theme of a radio address to be given tonight by Mrs. Marion McClain, head of the University reference library.

"Christmas Books" is the title of the lecture, which will be radio-cast from station KGW of the Morning Oregonian at 8 o'clock.

"I am going to mention certain books that might make good presents," said the reference librarian of the University library. "We believe that a policy of giving good books is much better than some of these things that are given as Christmas presents.

"This does not mean that the youngsters should be denied toys and given some dry book that they might not understand. I thoroughly believe that our children should have their toys to play with. Nor does it mean that a person should not give things of his own production that he knows would be dear to the heart of his friend. If a girl wants to make a handkerchief for her dear friend I certainly believe that it would be the best present she could give that friend.

What I do mean is that a lot of this unnecessary trash could well be supplemented with some good books.

"Will you mention classics, or popular books tonight in the lecture," Mrs. McClain was asked.

"Are there any more classics being produced?" she smiled.

A week from tonight Dr. Sweetser, of the lecture department, will broadcast a lecture entitled "Christmas Flowers."

TUBERCULOSIS YIELDS TO HEALTH PROGRAM

The only source of funds for the anti-tuberculosis and Public Health work conducted by the Oregon Tuberculosis Association and its seventeen affiliated County Public Health Associations, is the Christmas Seal Sale.

Every person who purchased seals last year is entitled to the satisfaction of knowing that even at the small per capita expenditure of 5 cents, over a period of a year, a long list of things was accomplished.

Thousands of children were enrolled in the Modern Health Crusade, and given the benefit of definite teaching and practice in the personal hygiene so necessary to good health. Public Health Nursing service was extended into a larger number of Oregon counties during the year than ever before.

Free tuberculosis clinics were held. Thousands of pieces of literature were distributed. Health films were circulated. Supplementary material to aid in the required teaching of Health and Hygiene was offered to every teacher in the state.

Another piece of the Association's work, of the utmost value, is the making of surveys, and investigations regarding the tuberculosis situation in the state. The Bureau of Clinics and Surveys has been able to furnish accurate and up-to-date statistics that are fast crystallizing public opinion in regard to the desperate need of additional tuberculosis hospital facilities.

IMPRESSIVE MEETING GIVEN BY Y. W. C. A.

The delightful candle lighting ceremony, a part of the recognition meeting for new members of the Y. W. C. A., was declared exceedingly impressive by those who took part at the bungalow Thursday afternoon at 4:30.

A large candle, symbolizing the divine light, was held by Florence Buck, president of the organization and each of the members, in turn, lit small candles from the large one, signifying the securing of the inspiration for service. Following the lighting of the candles, Miss Buck read the recognition service. Lois Covatt sang "My Task" and Olga Jackson, who was in charge of the music, gave a piano solo.

The meeting was attended by an unusually large attendance, numbering about sixty in all.

Vagaries

(By J. D.)

A book of cross-word puzzles 'neath a bough Some layer cake, a jug of sop and Thou Beside me by the old Mill Race; Oh, such a place were paradise, I swow!

Many an old flame has ended a match.

San Francisco journalism has startled its readers with the assertion that a new fish resembling a pear, shark, turtle, and a green pea, was seen by its discoverer—out past the twelve mile limit.

There was a man in our town And he was wondrous busy; He worked while sitting down; You see he owned a Lizzie.

The Flapper's Ode to Love I built a mighty stronghold, And passed my heart within; Came a Knight Errant, soft and bold, Who thought my heart to win.

He charged the stronghold fiercely And sought to break the wall; So strong he waged the battle The stronghold could not fall.

But—hist—here lies the secret— He thinks he did it all. But I, behind the rampart, Made slight openings in the wall.

TYPICAL COSTUMES SHOWN IN 'L'OMBRA'

"L'Ombra," opera format written by Friedrich von Flotow, and given Wednesday night at the Eugene armory, was presented by an all star cast of singers who have appeared before a number of the royal families abroad.

The presentation was marked by special lighting effects brought by the opera company. The costumes which were typical of the latter part of the fifteenth century, were made expressly for "L'Ombra" by Antoni Oberding, an official costumer of the Chicago Opera company.

The opera, which was sung in English, is being presented for the first time in the United States. The coast to coast tour was started this fall, following a journey through Europe. The presentation in Eugene was given under the auspices of the local chapter of the American Association of University Women.

YOCUM AND PHILLIPS HAVE ARTICLE PRINTED

In the current number of the American Naturalist there appears an article by Dr. Harry B. Yocum and Ben I. Phillips of the department of zoology on the subject, "Luteal Cells and Sexual Dimorphism of Feathering in Wild Birds."

This is the second paper presenting results of investigations now being carried on by Dr. Yocum on the relation of the reproductive organs and feathering in birds. The first article entitled "Luteal Cells in the Gonad of the Phalarope," appeared in the March number of the Biological Bulletin.

The whole question under consideration is one of much importance to the zoologist and involves a consideration of the relation of the reproductive glands to the so-called secondary sexual characteristics. It is hoped that further results will be obtained as the work progresses.

PHYSICAL EDUCATION CLASS IS UNUSUAL

Nine Girls are Enrolled in Dancing Group

Two senior majors in the department of physical education are conducting an unusual class in individual gymnasium. This class is part of an experiment conducted by Miss Harriet Thomson and Miss Lillian Stupp over a period of two years.

Nine girls are enrolled in this class, which has come to be known in the department as thesis dancing, due to the fact that this work constitutes the senior theses of the two majors in charge.

This educational interpretative dancing was developed by Miss H. Doublar of the University of Wisconsin. It differs from other aesthetic dancing in that it uses all the joints and muscles of the body in their normal positions. Its aim is to develop strength, poise, and muscle control. If this experiment proves its value as a successful corrective measure, it will probably be offered as one of the regular individual gymnasium classes in the near future.

Each year for the past two years, eight or ten girls are selected from the individual gymnasium classes and given this work for one or two terms. Selection has been based solely on their interest in dancing.

While it is still too early to make an accurate estimate, the improvement made by this year's classes tallies with the marked improvement made by similar classes last year.
