'Dick' Smith—Oregon Coach

"DICK" Smith, son of Oregon, has been selected as advisory coach of football for the University, and satisfaction reigns in the Webfoot camp. A careful sounding out of campus and alumni opinion simmers down to just this: "Dick Smith is a great coach, a man good enough to coach any place. His offer to stay as long as needed is one of the most generous acts that ever came from a loyal Oregon alumnus. We're behind 'Dick' to a man, and next fall will see the greatest turnout of football men and football supporters the University ever had!"

Smith insists upon being referred to as an "advisory coach," but in spite of the title, he will have full charge of all grid work, both varsity and freshman. To assist him he will have Billy Reinhart, for the backfield, Bart Spellman for the line, and Baz Williams for the first-year men. With the material on hand Oregon will have a season of successes.

The new coach will say nothing in regard to the chances for next year, nor of the probable outcome of the big games with California, Stanford and Washington, but he says that the varsity is "going to work harder than it ever worked before." Practice is to start as soon as the men can be brought together, and it will be serious practice. Smith does not follow any special "style" of football, but every play is based on definite principles.

Smith himself was one of the greatest football players ever seen in the country. His record is familiar to all, and he has demonstrated that he can coach.

Oregon welcomes the new coach. Everyone feels that a great year is ahead.

The Last Gasp

THE paying of fees began yesterday. That is, the period for paying fees for the winter term began yesterday, but very few students have paid. Judged by previous terms, the students are in no hurry. Indeed, they usually take plenty of time. Then, on the last day, they take their own time to the extent of several hours standing in line before the cashier's windows waiting for the—by that time—privilege of passing their money to assistants inside.

It might be an interesting bit of research for some ambitious freshman to find out whether or not the business administration students, who make a special study of business efficiency, are any more to the fore than the rest. Certainly many venerable seniors carry their years heavily in this particular.

Recognition of practical time-saving and effort-saving in paying fees early would thin the ranks of the "last gaspers."

ZOOLOGY GROUP PLANS STUDY OF ANIMAL LIFE

Dr. Harry B. Yocum, of the University department of zoology, is planning to go to Sunset Bay, fourteen miles west of Marshfield, this summer, where with a group of graduate students he will carry on research on the animal life of that region.

"This is only a part of a larger biological survey which will probably be made of the state. It is hoped that a class may be developed in marine biology to study the animal life on that part of the coast," said Dr. Yocum.

WASHINGTON CHINESE STUDENTS GIVE EXHIBIT

University of Washington.—For the purpose of promoting friendly relationship between China and the United States, and to create in America a better appreciation of Chinese culture, the Chien society of China, a Chinese national association promoted by Chinese students in the University of Washington, gave a Chinese exhibit in the new Olympic hotel the first week of January.

Exhibits were obtained from China and from people in this country who have Chinese collections. Because of the civil war in China at present, it was doubly hard to obtain material from that source, but the lines of communication were held open and material came over as fast as possible. A valuable collection of pure Chinese linen and finely embroidered articles as well as some valuable scrolls were sent over by the women's vocational association of I Ching, China.

SIGNS WORN BY OFFENDING FRESHMEN AT COLUMBIA

Columbia University.—"I am Smart—I Break Freshman Rules" was the tenor of the signs worn by offending freshmen at the Columbia University. Several members of the Avengers, sophomore society, remained in charge of the prisoners.

Vagaries

(By J. D.)

When life was bold and love was young,
When tender vows from lips were wrung,
That trembled 'neath a falt'ring tongue;

When cheeks were rosy at the dawn,
And eyes were sparkling like the morn
From which all trace of night is gone;

When lovelight crowned the purple hills
And danced around the rocks and rills;

'Twas then I paid her compliments
Nor raked upon the consequence—
So now I pay her bills:

Now life is sad, for love was fled,
The blushing cheeks have lost their red,
Forgotten are the vows we said;

The purple hills have turned to gray,
And gone the dancing twilight gay,
The night has come, gone is the day.

Small wonder life seems full of ills
Since love awakens no more thrills,
Alas, too late my heart repents
That once I paid her compliments
So now I pay her bills!

ADVERTISING SEMINAR CLASS MAKES RESEARCH

The advanced advertising seminar class of the school of journalism has just completed a market investigation of the Eugene territory for a national recognition advertising agency. The investigation, which was worked out in conjunction with the Portland branch, had for its purpose the determination of the potential market for a new type of automobile tire. The work of the class covered the tire merchants in the Eugene section, garages and automobile drivers.

The work of the class will be an important factor in the determination of the advertising and merchandising policy adopted by the tire company, according to a letter from the advertising firm to Randolph T. Kuhn, who is assisting W. F. G. Thacher, advertising instructor. Another similar campaign is being carried on by the class in order to put them in touch with actual advertising problems from the field of industry.

MAT BOUT IS COMING TO ARMORY WEDNESDAY

Ed Grant, student in the law school at the University, is promoting the first wrestling match held in Eugene in five years. It will be held at the armory next Wednesday night and will feature Tom Grant, instructor at the Multnomah club, and Joe Reynolds of Corvallis.

The match will last two hours, for best two out of three falls, or a decision. Jack O'Neil of Eugene, will referee.

Grant has defeated Ted Thye of Portland, light heavyweight champion of the world, but failed to get the crown, as he was overweight. Reynolds has participated in 35 matches in the last two years, winning 32 of them. Among his victims was Ralph Hand of Cottage Grove, who has headlined in Portland several times.

Grant will weigh 185 pounds and Reynolds 180 pounds. Two preliminaries also will be on the card.

EARLY ENGLISH LIFE IS DISCUSSED AT MEETING

Social, economic, and civil life in England, chiefly during the seventeenth century, was described last night by Cecil S. Smith, senior in the history department, at the monthly meeting of the History club. "Pre-industrial England" was the title of Smith's paper.

Many of the artistic advantages of the guild system have been lost in the industrial revolution, according to Smith. Conditions of the sixteenth century were very vividly pictured to the members of the club. Group discussion followed the presentation of the paper.

This was the second regular meeting of the new history organization which was formed last term. It is made up of those interested in history. At the February meeting of the club Alice Lindell will present a paper on international diplomacy.

EDUCATIONAL FILMS LISTED IN CATALOGUE

A new film catalogue for 1925, listing more than a half-million feet of educational films, is now on the press, according to Alfred Powers, in charge of the visual education department of the extension division. "The film is available for churches, schools, and educational institutions," he said. "They are becoming more and more in demand every year, and it is proven by the rapid increase of the number of feet now in use."

Included in the new lists in the catalogue is a list of more than twenty reels of official war film which has historical value. The industrial film is furnished to the extension division by the United States bureau of mines.

Double-Star Phenomena Explained by Professor

Twins and Triplets Common In Astral World Also

Castor and Pollux, the twin stars, are not twins. They are triplets. Castor is a pair of twins, himself, and Pollux is the triplet.

Professor E. H. McAlister, of the mechanics and astronomy department, describes this phenomena easily. Castor is a double-star, that is, a large star with a smaller one encircling it slowly, which the naked eye sees as one.

There are many double-stars, Professor McAlister explained, which can be recognized as such only with the aid of telescope. Mizar, in the crook of the Big Dipper's handle, is a double-star, as there is a small one close behind it. A powerful telescope reveals that the larger of the two, is two stars in itself, and that the smaller mentioned above is also two stars, making four where only one is seen with the naked eye.

The red star which is now seen in the southeast in the early evening is Betelgeuse, named by ancient Arab astronomers. It is one of the few stars whose diameter has been measured. An apparatus recently perfected for this purpose shows that it is 214 million miles in diameter, or 30 million times as large as the earth.

ANNE DEAR:
How times does fly! Here it is a week since I wrote to you. Daily I planned to write; but really, Anne, I have been so busy that I scarcely dared to breathe.

I must tell you about the dinner we gave the other night. We had iced cocktail, and the most delicious frozen dessert—all chilled in our own ice box. We have just installed a Kelvinator from Sigwart's Electric Shop in our old ice box. This is an attachment which does away with keeping ice. The electric motor keeps the air cold and dry, odors will not carry as they do in the moist air of an ordinary ice box and food will keep indefinitely.

Sunshine and rain! and daffodils! Spring is surely here! Down at the Style Shop there are some charming spring bonnets in black or brown satin with bright trimmings. These make fine early season hats. One must dress up to the weather, don't you think?

Peg is an inveterate bargain hunter. She found out that Skeie's were having a January sale on beads and hurried right down there. She bought a lovely amber cut string which just added the right touch to her costume to go with her new hat.

"There she goes, on her toes, All dressed up in her Sunday clothes."

So sang the Delts, as Midge and I went past the house today. "My Best Girl" is a sure fire hit around here. "Me And the Boy Friend" is getting by big, too. The Eugene Music Shop is having a run on both of these hits.

My skin is certainly the kind 'you love to touch;' for I got a marvelous massage at the Hast- ing Sisters today. They use the Adele Miller creams which work wonders to one's face. As they also sell these creams, which come in attractive jars, I bought a supply.

When one has to go down town to get a hair cut, it takes so long. The Co-ed Barber Shop, which is on Kincaid street and just around the corner from the Co-op, makes it very convenient; for one may dash in there and get a hair cut in just a few minutes. Besides, they have experts for trimming women's hair.

Economics doesn't seem nearly as dry when one has some fresh Brazil nuts to munch on while reading it. We girls got a supply of them reasonably at Underwood and Elliott's; also some large, juicy Florida grape fruit which is ideal for breakfast—or any time, for that matter.

Louise certainly knows how to make herself comfortable and study at the same time. She bought a bronze finished adjustable study lamp at the White Electric Shop. It has a heavy base, big shade, a long cord with a two-piece socket plug; so that she can adjust the lamp at any angle and see to do work without any difficulty.

Midge is in the infirmary, and probably will be there for a week yet. We girls had a Tivoli flower basket, for they are the latest thing in crockery, filled with fragrant sweet peas, and arranged attractively with maiden hair fern, sent to her from Raup's Floral Shop. I rather wish I were ill, so that some one would send me one of these adorable baskets.

Here's hoping that some one sends me flowers,
CAROL.
