Sword and Plume

THE KNIGHT of old rode forth to war with all "the boast of heraldry, the pomp of power." Of his capacity for service his sword was the symbol. At the sign of the sword he was known to be a princely gentleman with a taste for daring. At the sign of the plume he was revealed to be still the princely gentleman, one with an eye to looking well in the lists. And why not, if by so doing he could win the favor of the queen of love and beauty?

The Knights of the Yellow Casque, the Oregon Knights, are not such a far cry from the chivalry of an olden, a golden age. True, they do not escort trembling young damsels through dark forests nor rescue them from marauding bands of ruffians, but they do practical things like directing the traffic through the town during Homecoming, and serving as guides for preppers at the conferences of high school student body officers and editors held annually on the campus.

Without their trusty swords, the knights nevertheless keep ever before them the ideal of service. They work without financial support from the student body. They expect no reward except in service itself. These small, yet important services—meeting visiting teams at the trains, handling crowds at games, collecting tickets—were not in the hands of any organized group until 1921.

The group has developed in efficiency from the very time of its organization, until this year it accomplished for the first time in history the task of absolutely clearing Willamette street of all traffic during the noise parade. It cooperated with the O. A. C. Knights in handling 18,000 people during the Oregon-O. A. C. game. It has received written praise from the Washington Knights for the creditable way in which it handled the crowds at the Washington game. It has ushered at all football and basketball games; at assembly on Thursday; at the Oxford debate. As members of the national body of Intercollegiate Knights, the Oregon Knights have lived up to the finest standard.

The Knights have served the campus in a very real way. Now they are establishing a new tradition, by giving a costume ball this evening which they intend to make an annual affair. The idea of a costume ball is in the nature of an inspiration. It brings back a breath of the colorful, the graceful. There is no queen of love and beauty to bestow her glove as a favor, but the campus folk can show their favor in a substantial way by consistent cooperation. And who would deny a plume to a brave and princely gentleman?

A Good Start

IF PREPARATION and foresight can assure favorable results, then the Women's League convention to be held here this spring should be a decided success. Announcement of committees has been made, and it seems that no detail has been forgotten by the women handling the arrangements. The next step is the cooperation of the entire campus in entertaining the delegates.

It is truly an opportunity for Oregon to be the seat of this meeting, for it is an endeavor worthy of whatever effort is exerted. The women on this campus will hear the timely discussions sure to come from such a group. One hundred women from colleges west of the Appalachian mountains will take up problems, the solution of which should tend to raise the tone of campus life. The questions of housing girls, of raising scholastic standards, of regulating campus activities—these are but a few of the topics which must claim attention, and bring us a step nearer to the ideal balance in the University program.

Days of hard work are in store for the many young women on the committee, but their compensation will be the realization that much good may come to college women as a result.

ABDUCTION STORY

To the Editor of the Emerald:
I wish to correct a story which has appeared in several of the newspapers of the state during the past week. The tale of the abduction of the University girl was given out by the girl herself under a spell of hysteria and fainting. She is well known to me, as is also the fact of her frequent spells of fainting and hysteria.
She left Eugene alone on the stage for Cottage Grove on Monday, February 2, and was recognized as she boarded the stage by an acquaintance at the Eugene terminal. After leaving the stage at Cottage Grove, she fainted, recovering in a dazed condition, became hysterical, and gave a story of abduction to the officer by whom she was reported. The story which she told is typical of such hysteria and is unsubstantiated by any fact. There were no men accompanying her and none were implicated in the case.
Very truly yours,
VIRGINIA JUDY ESTERLY,
Dean of Women, University of Oregon.

GOLF AS A MINOR SPORT

News spatches indicate that the University of Oregon may be denied participation in the Pacific Coast inter-collegiate golf tournament because golf at the University is not recognized as a minor sport and consequently no funds are available with which to send players to the tourney.

If the student council heeds recent agitation among golf enthusiasts and votes to include golf among the recognized minor sports, that body will have acted wisely. Golf has become a national sport and is worthy of inter-collegiate participation along with the other minor sports—wrestling, tennis and swimming. Prominent eastern universities include golf among their competitive sports, as do Washington, California and Stanford on the coast.

Golf lends itself to successful inter-university competition for several reasons. It requires a high degree of skill to play a creditable game of golf. It demands a long period of practice and training. The competitions may be carried on with small expense to the universities. Perhaps the greatest factor in favor of the game is the good derived by the player.

Whether the aspirant makes the University team or not, he receives benefit in direct proportion to the amount he has played. He profits from the exercise, the practice, the training; and golf, unlike certain other games, brings pleasure to the player whether winner or loser—or merely second rate scrub.

Also, the golfer need not abandon his sport when he leaves college. Like the tennis player and swimmer, and unlike the participant in football, track and baseball, the golfer may continue throughout life to reap the same benefits he derived from the game during his college days.

ANNE DEAR:

Busy is not the word to express the state of affairs that exist in the house this week. We are expecting one of the national officers; so of course that means lots of entertaining. First, let me tell you about the party we are giving for our guest next week.

We are making plans for a formal dinner, to which a number of the alums have promised to come. As our color scheme is to be carried out in red and white, we have placed an order at Underwood and Elliott's Grocery for some of that delicious plain white cake which they sell. Wish I had a piece now!

The centerpiece for the table will be a gilded wicker basket filled with fragrant red carnations. I was with Peg today when she placed the order at Raup's Floral Shop. These carnations are so large and double that they resemble gorgeous roses. Then, too, the shape of the basket is attractive because of its unusualness. Sprigs of fern are to be wired, so that they will stay at just the right angle.

College keeps one busy trying to look the best. Yesterday, between my one and three o'clock classes, I went to the Co-ed Barber Shop, which is right next to the campus. Really, if I had to go down town every time that I needed a haircut, I'd not have one often, for it takes so long to go down and back. My new hair cut is called a French bob, which is the newest fashion, so they told me at the shop.

Haven't you often wondered if it were ever possible to have hands that feel and look like those you see advertised in the magazines. At Hasting Sisters, where they employ only experts, I got an oil manicure yesterday. From now on, I think that I shall have a manicure each week, for it is a necessity if a person wishes to be well groomed.

Mother insisted that I get a new formal gown, so I am having Mrs. Fannie L. Stansbie, 933 Willamette street, make it. I got black georgette, as black is so popular this season, and took it up to her shop which is above Penny's store. She suggested that I have only a touch of color on it, so I am going to buy a cherry-colored flower to wear on the left shoulder.

The idea of a formal dinner does not frighten us now that Sigwart's installed a Kelvinator an iceless ice box which is run by electricity and so regulated that the temperature remains constant. In an ice box as soon as the ice starts melting the temperature drops. Put wilted vegetables in the Kelvinator for a few hours and they come out crisp and fresh, as a result our salads and vegetables are always delicious.

Alice Graham announced her engagement to Bob White last Saturday at dinner. We've been expecting it for a long time but it will probably be a surprise to you. He gave her a beautiful ring which he bought at Skeie's. It is platinum filagree with a square set diamond. The stone is quite large and has a great deal of fire and sparkle. She's a lucky girl, don't you think?

Tell me more about the affairs that are being given for Patricia Manners.

Don't Judge From Appearances!

THE earth LOOKS flat enough! That's why so many thousand years came and went before our ancestors even suspected the terrestrial globe of being round. Their eyes deceived them!

Don't depend upon appearances to guide you right. Don't buy goods on the strength of looks alone. Merchandise with a well-known name has the call. Only the maker of a good product can afford to advertise his name. Attempts to popularize unworthy goods can not succeed.

Wise merchants and manufacturers seek the good papers to tell the stories of their wares. The publishers seek the reputable advertising for their readers' guidance. Well-informed buyers seek news of good merchandise through the columns of the best papers.

This proves the value of advertising. Neither advertiser nor publisher can prosper without your patronage. Therefore, it is to their advantage to cater to you. They do it, too.

It is distinctly to your advantage to be guided by the messages they lay before you—the advertisements.

READ THEM REGULARLY!
