Let's Build It!

PROBABLY few students have given much thought to the difficulties which confront a basketball coach at Oregon when he wishes to have his squad practice. Many students have taken it for granted that since the floor of the Men's gymnasium has a basket at each end, the Varsity men merely have to don their suits, run upstairs, and learn to pass the ball and throw baskets.

The men might learn to pass the ball and to throw baskets, in the gymnasium easily enough, but they would not become orientated to the distances and angles of the Armory floor—and the Armory floor is where the conference contests are held. It is vital that a team should know its home floor, and know it well. To do this, the men must practice on it constantly.

The Armory is off the campus a considerable distance, making it unhandy to reach; valuable time is lost in going between it and the campus, and the floor is not always available for practice when it is needed. The O. A. C. game must be played there this afternoon, rather than on Friday evening, because the University could not obtain the Armory in the evening this week.

Despite this handicap, Coach Reinhart this year has developed a team Oregon has reason to feel proud of. There is no doubt that a basketball pavilion on the campus would greatly enhance Oregon's chance to continue building such squads every year. With this idea in mind the athletic finance committee Tuesday passed a motion recommending that the president of the student body appoint a committee to present plans for financing such a structure.

The suggested building will be planned for accomodating about 5,000 spectators. With the growing interest in basketball on the Pacific coast, such provision is highly advisable. Over 500 persons were turned away from the Armory when O. A. C. met the Varsity here.

There is every reason why this structure should be completed by next year. It will largely depend on the support of the student body and the interest shown by its members.

The pavilion is badly needed. Let's have it!

Get Out, Please!

NOT SO very long ago possession of a book was regarded with a degree of pride. Possession of several books was considered sufficient cause for no small amount of elation. Access to a library filled with thousands of valuable and interesting volumes was a privilege eagerly sought; much envied—by those less fortunate.

With the growth and development of the printing press and gigantic publishing concerns, however, books have ceased to be a curiosity and a treasure, and instead, have fallen into the place of accepted and common articles, like the tooth-brush, the automobile, and co-ed galoshes.

With the growth of the University, also, a number of careless, thoughtless, or malicious, students have drifted into the Oregon student body.

Not so very long ago, when books were revered and the students were few in number, valuable volumes did not have to be placed in the Library vault to prevent complete violation of student honor by some of its members. Librarians, in checking over such volume would not have discovered priceless plates and rare illustrations removed by vicious penknives. Books were not helpless prey then; then were sacred.

"Familiarity breeds contempt," it is said. If true, books should be one of the exceptions to this rule, which prove it. "Contempt" is a colorful word, full of meaning. We fell contemptuous for those who desecrated their privileges and the Library books. They drifted into the student body without our knowledge; they are invited to drift out in the same manner.

Publication of the examination schedule yesterday reminds that little time remains of this term. Better brush the dust off the typewriter and finish any uncompleted term papers before the printers get out the scandal sheet forms and clean them up for the press.

Ho for the game today!

WOMEN'S CLASS SWIM TO BE HELD TUESDAY

The first class meet in women's swimming is scheduled for next Tuesday in the women's gymnasium pool. Lots will be drawn some time this week to determine which classes will swim. This will be announced at a later date.

The senior class team will be chosen at the class try-out Friday. Saturday, the sophomore, junior and freshman teams will be selected at the hours previously announced.

It is imperative that all girls working for a place on class teams report at class try-outs.

Class practices are in full swing. Many candidates for class teams have already completed the four required practices.

More Style for Spring Than You've Seen In Years

There are hundreds of new things for you here this season. The suit styles are different—wider shoulders; low pockets; smart two and three button models; shorter coats that are narrower at the hips. Trousers are wider. Single breasted models are good—so are the double breasted.

Architecture—Today and Tomorrow

THE great buildings of today, designed in masses which rear rugged, mounting profiles into the sky, foretell even greater and more massive structures for the next half century. Always a close coordination of architecture and engineering, of design and construction, the architecture of the future will find architect and engineer working ever more closely together. Certainly modern invention—modern engineering skill and organization, will prove more than equal to the demands of the architecture of the future.
