Let's Be Sure!

THIS afternoon the recently appointed traditions committee will meet to discuss the present mooted question concerning smoking on the old campus. It is presumed the members will decide on some definite plan at this time which will be presented to the student council this evening for action.

In addition to consideration of the "smoke-or no smoke" controversy, if it may be termed in such a way, the committee will take up the whole subject of traditions at Oregon and it is not unreasonable to expect that the recommendations it will make to the representative body of the students tonight may have much to do with the future of traditions here at the University. Customs such as these, the product of a gradual evolutionary process, really cannot be made or unmade so simply as by the student council merely voting "aye" and "nay" how-

Should the council vote to lift the ban on campus smoking, which the Emerald most emphatically asserts should not be done, there will be a very considerable group of students, interested persons certainly, who will be the object of a great injustice. It seems that this is a matter for consideration by the April 30, and a report submitted individual lessons. Beginners are entire student body, whose will can best be ascertained in this sible. instance at a general election, as, for instance, at the annual building of 200 new seats and the is left largely to ideas about the spring affair scheduled for next month.

In view therefore, of the fact that much depends upon the council's action concerning traditions, The Emerald suggests to the body, after threshing out the committee report and agreeing upon an essential and fundamental policy for the future observance of traditions, consider its action as not final. Rather, after accepting the report, either in the original or amended. as it sees fit, the student council in justice to the campus should vote to refer the entire question for consideration at the spring

Kings and Things

KING Sisowatti of Cambodia, at 92, is starting from his Asiatic kingdom on a trip around the world, we are informed by a caption in Current Opinion. He is, presumably, the oldest living monarch in the world. The king of Cambodia, however, has nothing on certain seniors who are looking forward to graduation and a trip out into the world in June. Many of them, like the venerable king, have advanced considerably in age-grown hoary with the weight of ruling. Their reigns include sundry offices-president, high and mighty eagle, or keeper of the archives of this and that. A few have even attempted sallying forth into "the kingdom of mind."

The seniors, in leaving will scarcely be able to equal the worthy king in one sense: they will not have 2,000,000 subjects eagerly awaiting their return. They will not leave behind them 46,000 square miles in the care of the keeper of the seals or whoever signs and seals the fate of such territory. They will depart in peace, taking along a dog-eared Taussig or such flighty books as their favorite authors have produced-relies of undergraduate days. There will be pins in plenty, worn as the King of Cambodia would wear his epaulets-symbol of his lofty rank and august position.

DEAN STRAUB REPLIES Editor Emerald:

In this morning's Emerald, Colonel Leader says that nearly all the Oregonians who visited him said, "Colonel, for the love of Mike, where's the nearest liquor store. The only honorable exception last year was Dean Straub, who, of course, knew already."

Now, this is the true story. Last September, while in Vancouver, B. C., I did call up Colonel Leader, but I wanted to know where the Presbyterian church was. I knew he would be as good an authority on that as he was on the question ON LINKS RUMORED on that as he was on the question the other Oregonians asked. The telephone brought no answer. The next morning I called again without getting a reply.

The sweet-voiced Canadian girl said, "Are you calling Colonel Leader?" I said "Yes." She answered, "Call up the jail." "The 'jail," I said in reply. "Yes," she said, "he spends most of his time

So I called up the jail, and the jailer said, "No, he is not here just now." I asked, "When will he
