An Opportunity at Home

DURING the latter part of February announcement was made of the gift of $3,000,000 by Simon Guggenheim, American mining magnate, for establishment of a scholarship foundation to allow American students opportunity for study in foreign countries. The endowment is a memorial to the financier's son, John Simon Guggenheim, who died in 1922.

Dedication of a fortune for the benefit of scholarship and furtherance of education should bring an almost inconceivable return for the original investment, considering the gift as such. Certainly there are few ways in which money may be employed to earn a larger interest rate, if not in gold, in something far more precious, gratitude.

The world will always view the memory of Cecil Rhodes with reverence for his dream to "life the world's heart higher" through his gift to scholarship; individuals who have enjoyed his beneficence will throughout life consider him their friendly patron.

Everyone is not the possessor of a large fortune, like Rhodes and Guggenheim. Nevertheless, an individual with but a small fortune and a large desire to confer a gift of lasting significance to humanity, though perhaps without public notice, has an opportunity to do so.

Every year a considerable number of earnest students, who would be of vastly greater worth to themselves and to the State if they were enabled to complete their college education, must forego their dreams of a University degree and "go to work." A larger principal in the student loan fund, allowing more students to borrow sufficient amounts to remain in the University, would make that statement untrue.

News Comments

There appears to be a conflict of fact in the two letters printed in the Communication column recently, one from Colonel John Leader the other from Dean John Straub. The incongruity in statement is so striking it is impossible to believe both are right, possible that one is right and one is wrong but considering the controversial topic and the controversial gentlemen, it is probable that both are wrong.

In speaking of the archery classes a news item reads: "Whether or not distance shooting will be scheduled for class competition will depend upon the ability and progress of the students." A comforting statement, truly, to the student who must traverse the campus in range of "distance shooting," and worthy of causing the voice to be lifted in earnest blessing upon a thoughtful instructor.

"Tennis Players Asked to Amplify Costumes"—headline. After surveying some of the nether extremities exhibited out on the concrete, one may readily believe the aesthetic ran the moral sense a close second in actuating the school of physical education to issue the order. As William Morris was wont to say: "Ugliness does more than offend the eye; it deadens the soul."

Coming: "Forty Winks," the funniest farce ever filmed, featuring the inimitable Raymond Griffith, Viola Dana and Theodore Roberts.
