

MILL RACE MAY LOSE TRADITION

Fear Of Commercialism Leads to Action

RESOLUTION IS PASSED

Council Objects to Marring Beauty of Place

Encroachment of commercialism upon the mill race, long cherished in Oregon tradition in memory, song, and prose and equally cherished in reality, is now frowned upon by the student council, which yesterday announced a resolution condemning specifically the erection of a public dance hall near the site of the annual canoe fete.

The council's resolution, though addressed to whom it may concern, was sent to members of the city planning commission of Eugene, of which Mayor E. B. Parks is a member.

Commission Is Named

Others on the commission are: Prof. W. R. B. Wilcox, school of architecture; Miss Mozelle Hair, extension division; Paul Kelly, editor Eugene Guard; Judge E. O. Potter, 957 Willamette street; S. M. Calkins, U. S. National bank building; H. B. Ruth, 395 West Seventeenth street; Harry Devereaux, city engineer; and Dr. N. C. Nelson, White Temple, Eugene.

The resolution was adopted by the student council at its meeting September 30, when Anna DeWitt and Carl Dahl were instructed to prepare the paper. Yesterday copies were placed in the mail for the members of the planning commission.

Future Action Problematical

"The student council, speaking for the Associated Students, believes the mill race should be maintained in its present form," Walter Malcolm, president, said in a statement yesterday. "Just what action we can take is problematical at this time," he added, "but we are prepared to defend our position."

The resolution, in full, follows: Whereas: The annual canoe fete sponsored by the University of Oregon affords a great deal of entertainment and pleasure to the students, the people of Eugene, and the guests of the University, and

Whereas: Any commercial enterprise tending to utilize either the mill race, or its banks in this vicinity, would impair the beauty of its fete and ultimately lead to its abolishment, and

Whereas: The erection of a public dance hall would change the atmosphere of the mill race from its picturesque quietness to that of jazz, noise, and lights, and

Whereas: The congestion of traffic at a dangerous intersection of highway and railway crossing, by the Anchorage, would endanger the safety of student pedestrians,

Therefore, Be It Resolved by the students of the University of Oregon that any such undertaking is contrary to their interests and is undesirable in proximity to the University.

HOW STUDENTS ENTER HAYWARD FIELD TODAY

All Oregon students go through gate eight to the new stand, by order of Jack Benefiel. This is necessary to avoid congestion at the gates. Students are also requested to leave their cars at home.

NEW YORK ATTRACTS FORMER OREGONIANS

Oregon Colony Springing Up In New York

"Quite an Oregon colony is springing up around Columbia University and New York," reads a letter just received by Professor George Turnbull, from John Piper, journalism graduate of '24, who is in New York.

While on the campus, Mr. Piper was associate editor of the Emerald under Arthur Rudd. He is now with the New York Sun.

According to the letter, Kenneth Youel, '23, former editor of the Emerald, has been in New York. He is considering a position with a Philadelphia paper.

Claude Robinson, '24, former A. S. U. O. president, is attending Columbia University and staying at Fernald Hall.

John MacGregor, '23, and president of the A. S. U. O. that year, is taking law at New York University.

Marion Lay, '23, is writing scenarios for Universal Films. Kate Pinneo, of the same class is working in a book store in New York. Hank Foster, ex '20, former Oregon track man, and his wife are in New York also.

Virginia Pearson, '24, is attending Pratt Institute in Brooklyn taking a library course.

EXPERIENCES IN AFRICA TOLD BY HOLDREDGE

Claire Holdredge, graduate of the University three years ago and since a diamond miner in the Belgian Congo of Central Africa, talked to the Condon Club on his experiences in Africa and the diamond mines Thursday night. The club, composed of geology majors and professors, assembled at Dr. Warren D. Smith's home. This was the first meeting of the year.

One of the main points of Mr. Holdredge's speech was to discuss the geology of the country, a matter of interest to the geology majors. In brief, he described the land as being void of forestry; a high, gently rolling plateau.

"Because of the barrenness of the land," he said, "the inhabitants must plant everything they eat, due to the fact that the leading crop is a biennial, and because of the native's inability to store away for the future, they have two years of plenty, followed by two years of famine," the Oregon graduate explained.

The speaker also expressed his belief that, although some temperate zones, as for example the canal zone, could be made inhabitable for the white man, Africa never would.

He gave two reasons for this: it is too large a country, and the malaria mosquito is too prevalent.

BOARD ORDERS MANY CHANGES IN COURSES

A ruling upon the question of the alleged duplication of the University's courses by the Oregon Agricultural College was made by the Board of Higher Curricula during the summer at meetings held in Portland.

The most important changes ordered were the elimination of the course in pre-engineering at the University and that in pre-medicine at the College. The board ruled that music was a special subject of instruction and journalism as a major course for department be confined to the University alone and that only service courses in these subjects and in physical education be given at O. A. C.

The department of household arts at the University is to be reorganized along lines that met the approval of the board. The board ruled that the school of business administration at the University and the school of commerce at the college are sufficiently differentiated, and that they may operate at both institutions as at present.

An agreement had been reached between the two institutions regarding courses in education and the arts and sciences previously to the meeting of the board at which the rulings above were made.

The controversy arose last spring when O. A. C. submitted a list of new courses to the board of higher curricula for approval. The University in a brief presented May 18 protested against many of these courses on the ground that they would duplicate work already offered at the University.

At a meeting held in May between Colin V. Dymont, dean of the college of literature, science, and the arts at the University, and M. E. Smith, dean of the school of basic arts and sciences, the Agricultural College agreed not to offer a bachelor's degree in its school of basic arts and sciences and to offer no major work in this school, its courses to serve only as service courses.

In July Dean H. D. Sheldon of the school of education at Oregon and Dean E. D. Ressler of the school of vocational education at O. A. C. reached an agreement regarding courses to be offered in the respective schools.

Policy Regarding China Chosen for Debate With O. A. C. Varsity Team

(Continued from page one) contest; Joe Frazer, who participated in the Oregon-Stanford Radio debate; Herschel Brown, member of the team which met O. A. C. and Ralph Bailey, who debated in the Washington-Idaho-Oregon contest. B. V. Ludington, an experienced debater, who attended Northwestern university last year, will be among the applicants for this year's team. A debate has also been scheduled for the freshmen men of Oregon and Corvallis. The question is, resolved: That the federal government should discontinue granting subsidies to states. The preliminaries for this event which will take place in April, will be held October 29.

The freshmen debates will give first ear men and women training for varsity events.

The plans for the women's contests are being arranged by Mildred Whitcomb, forensic manager for women. Miss Whitcomb also has charge of the arrangements for the freshmen women's debate, which will probably be held with O. A. C. This will be a unique event. "I know of no place in the United States where a contest of this kind is held," declared Coach Gray.

Anyone wishing to enter the preliminaries for the varsity or the freshmen teams is urged to call on Mr. Gray, coach.

accepts the interpretation Science gives of the universe. Logically we must face the fact that the infinitesimal part of the cosmos we call our world was not specially created for man but that man has as a fundamental problem the one of understanding adaptation, not only in this near world but in the wide reaches of the cosmos.

TO NEW STUDENTS in the University we would advertise the presence of this distinctly humanistic and liberal church. We are one in spirit with the scientific atmosphere you will find in the lecture rooms of the University. We offer the religious interpretation to scientific facts. You are always welcome to our services. We offer you that fine comradeship which flowers in lives which freely seek the truth.

'How a Religious Liberal Reads His Bible' supplemented by a study of characteristic books of the Bible will be the general theme of a series of talks by Frank Fay Eddy, pastor of the church, during the next few months. An invitation is given to anyone interested in making a study of the Bible as a collection of sacred literature to join this class which meets at the close of the Morning Service for organization.
