

FROSH FOOTBALL GAME CANCELLED

Yearling Team Practices With Varsity Eleven

YEAR'S PROSPECTS GOOD

Preliminary Match Listed For Coming Saturday

Because a game with the University Frosh grid team would be against their school rules and regulations, the Chemawa Indian school has called off the game which was scheduled for tomorrow afternoon. This was to have been the initial game of the frosh football season.

Hard work has been the meat of the Yearling team the last couple of weeks under the coaching of Spike Leslie, and the training is beginning to show itself in the form of a good looking line-up. Their daily practices with the varsity eleven are proving them to have the stuff good teams are made of, and a stiff battle is predicted for their first game.

Although graduate manager Jack Benefiel is trying to schedule a game with some other school, the date at which the game was called off may make such arrangements impossible. In such a case there will be a preliminary game between the Frosh and the Second team preceding the game Saturday, beginning at 1:30 and consisting of four ten-minute quarters.

tors on the field state that work like this reminds them of the days when Bezdeck, famous 1916 coach, use to drive the men up and down the field until long after the sun had set. When a man is through working in the line he is shifted to the bucking machine and under the tutelage of Doc Stegeman is shown the method of hitting and shoving forward without stopping. "Let's go, dig, dig, and dig," are the words from Stegeman as the men start down the field, with the machine trying to hold them back.

Coach Leslie of the babe aggregation has put fight into his frosh aggregation which is the equal of the older and more experienced varsity men. The yearlings go into the scrimmage with every thing they have and take all the first team can give. The men show the results of Leslie's coaching and are always on the move. Competition for places it going on in the first year ranks and with the material on hand it looks like a big freshman football year.

DICK SMITH RECALLS FOOTBALL AS PLAYED AT COLUMBIA IN 1903

Oregon Grid Mentor Aims to Develop Team Play Instead of Bringing Out Stars in Coming Season

"I played football in 1900 to 1903 just after the flying wedge was ruled out and the "guards back" play came into use. That was the newest thing in football at that time and the first team to use it walked right through their opponents before a defense was perfected.

"In the "guards back" play two heavy guards (guards were heavier those days than now) came back and the two guards lined up in the backfield. The three backs and the two guards lined up one behind the other and the ball was snapped to one. The ball carrier grasped the man in front of him and the men behind united to push him through. It was a steam roller at first which was unbeatable until some of the offense dove under the play and spilled the whole line of backs and guards, often being packed off the field in consequence."

Dick Smith is a storehouse of football lore. The reporter listened for two hours to Dick's live talk on football. Thirty years of football has been his record. He began back in 1896 by playing for Oregon and then for Columbia. Since then he has taken an active interest in the game. He has seen it develop from the crude mass formations and the piling up plays to the present highly complex battle between offense and defense. He has followed football and he knows it. Last year before that memorable Washington game he helped put the team into fighting shape. Dick Smith is about the most colorful football coach that Oregon has ever had.

From 1901-1903 he played fullback for Columbia. It was there that he was selected by Walter Camp on the All-American team. He was recognized in the East for two years as the most outstanding fullback, despite the fact that any man who did not come from Yale, Harvard or Princeton had to show wonderful form to make the All-American. The days of inter-sectional football had not come. Teams in the middle west and west were undeveloped; football centered on the big eastern teams.

Those were the days when men who played were big; big and fast. Backfield men were very large; guards averaged around 210 pounds in the eastern schools. It was a mass game with no passes or variation from bucking and end runs. Dick Smith weathered eight years of the hardest kind of football; football that was far more wearing and tearing than it is now. It was football that was about as destructive and vicious as the old flying wedge.

Dick Smith is an organizer. He is quiet and he encourages the men. He drives in a different manner, than the "hard boiled" coach. A big, brawny, quiet tempered man—he works smoothly and gets results. He inspires the respect of everyone with whom he comes in contact.

"The biggest thing in a football team," Dick said at the end of the interview, "and the thing I want most of all to put across before the coming season starts, is the spirit of the team. It's no one man team. Oregon's team this year will not be a one-man team. No stars are going to shine above the rest. If a man makes a touchdown the team should be thanked for giving him the chance. His interference, the men who bore the brunt of the offense, deserve the credit. It's the whole team playing football that makes winning teams."
