Honoring the Man and His Ideal; The Memorial Service for President Campbell

The irony of it all is that deserved appreciation came to him so late. While Prexy was with us we all respected and admired him; but it wasn't until his active work was done that his sterling worth came into bold relief.

This is rather the usual thing; but somehow it doesn't satisfy one's sense of justice that a man must give his life in service and then must die before his works are adequately understood by those whom his endeavors affected the most. "No justice here, perhaps; but the last to object would be the President himself. And so often does merit slip by unnoticed while life lingers, that it may almost be said to be a truism that time alone and not the adoration of one's contemporaries can rightfully ordain a mortal as a Great Man.

Who this fall has not heard something of this sort: "That is the idea President Campbell always gave us," or "He always held that ideal up to us." No matter what the nook or corner of the University, there remains that consciousness of the man in the ideal he left with his fellow-workers.

The University as it stands today embraces the Ideal of Prince Campbell. He himself embodied the Oregon Spirit; and that Oregon Spirit has been responsible for a scholarly University teaching an enjoyment of a well-rounded life, whereas had other forces been in control an entirely different institution might have been the result.

Freshmen and sophomores have been denied the privilege of knowing the President, and present juniors saw him but a few times. Because of his extended illness, the student body that will offer tribute tomorrow to the memory of the President will be to a considerable extent a stranger to his personality. Though so few students knew him as a man, all who are attending the University, and all who are to enroll in the University for years to come are to know him through partaking of the fruits of his vision and as recipients of the benefits of his works.

Many who never knew Prince Campbell will attend the services tomorrow because they wish to learn more of the greatness of this man and his ideal; and those who knew him personally will be eager to pay their tribute of devotion to the memory of the one they loved and who joined with them in the love of an Oregon ideal.

MORTALITY OF FOOTBALL TOGS AND EQUIPMENT OF SEASON HIGH

When one sees two teams struggling for victory on the gridiron, he seldom thinks of the vast amount of material required to equip those men for practice and actual play and the high mortality of football togs.

Complete new outfits are required each fall. Each of the varsity players uses from one to seven pairs of new shoes. When the season is over the shelves of the supply room are cluttered with damaged and antique paraphernalia.

A casual check uncovered the following items on hand:

1000 towels, 200 headguards, 250 pairs of shoulder pads, 400 pairs of football shoes, including 100 new pairs purchased this fall; 280 pairs of moleskin pants, including 132 new pairs; 450 pairs of footless hose, 28 new varsity jerseys, 25 new jerseys, 36 varsity hooded warm-ups, jerseys, 200 grey cotton freshman varsity jerseys, 75 old varsity 100 new sweat shirts.

More than six dozen footballs are required each year for practice. Eight dozen bats are used for baseball. In addition to the above, there is an immense assortment of knee braces, ankle braces, shoulder braces, belts, short socks, undershirts, drawers, and supporters.

The track, baseball, and basketball equipment on hand would form another long list. Suffice it to say that there are 125 old track pants on hand, and 90 pairs of the new salmon-colored ones, with corresponding track shirts. There are more than 200 pairs of track shoes on hand.

When this equipment outlives its usefulness, it is usually handed on to small high schools, whose exchequers prohibit the purchase of new togs. Roosevelt Junior High of Eugene, benefitted this fall to the extent of having their entire team outfitted from head to foot. Many of the small neighboring high schools receive practically all of their equipment from this source.

When the above facts are considered, it is easy to see why new grandstands are necessary and where a large portion of the gate receipts go. Let some quick-witted skeptic figure it out. The result will be surprising.

SEVEN SEERS

HERE'S YOUR HOROSCOPE
Saturday, November 21

Venus is in bed following a tough night with three college boys. Other heavenly bodies are scattered hither and yon so those of you who have this day as a birthday had better find another. Persons born today are due to live from birth to death. Some will have ingrown toe nails and eight out of every ten will be subject to halitosis (data compiled by Smith Bros.) For boys born today fortunes await them providing they marry the right girls. For girls born today the warning is not to eat at road houses as it is hard on the complexion.

Autumn
Dresses keep going higher, higher, and 'tis said there'll be more of this stuff.

But the dear young lady buyer, spends not a shilling for ye garter. Now the burning popular question is:
How do they keep their stockings up?

The Good Ship Rock and Eye
This little steam-driven frigate, quite conspicuous during Homecoming, is being awarded to Margo Vincent so she may take her curves with more ease. And what is still better the port holes will come in quite handy when sailing up the Mill Race.

DORIS:
Many girls have come to us with problems similar to this one and for that reason we are advising you to do what others have done—leave college.

Freshmen Paint Bench

Several Freshmen, who it is predicted, will be called before the Order of the "O", were seen painting the coveted senior bench on Thursday night. Yes everyone will admit that they did a good job. Now Obak thinks that this paint dope is the bunk. Frosh, what does it get you? You are the ones that have to rub it off and it is the firm opinion of the writer that these young sprigs should have their heads rubbed in the grassy green paint when apprehended.

How About the Team

That team is going to Washington next week. No, they haven't finished their training as many of you tea hounds think. No, they go out and work until dark each night, trying to perfect plays so that they will be able to spill the Huskies, and "win the world's championship." So let's talk it up and all go to Washington next week. Seattle is a better town than Eugene.

Concerning Bleachers

Obak invites the students to put communications in his columns. We realize that even the finance committee of our own University might err, and if you want to tell them what you think address it to Obak. We publish all sides, square or round and you get all the hollow.
