Oregon's Basketball Balloon

In Danger of a Puncture to the bursting point
The basketball balloon now floats over the Northwest division of the Pacific Coast conference tightly filled and likel to be pricked at any time to flutter down for
Is Idaho going to be the pin point tonight?
That is the question that is worrying both the team followers and Billy Reinhart. The team has changed from a dashing quintet that romped over every obstacle on the northern trip squad.
We do not know whether it is a slump or not. There ha been a momentary-let us hope it is momentary-slowing up in the team. The men have been doing poorly in practice.
The great fear of every coach is the slump bug-bear that comes to the best of teams, like a thief in the night as the poets would say, and like the proverbial bat that saps all the dash and fire from the men and ruins the team. A slump comes out of the air and some attribute it to staleness, some to lack of morale, and some to other reasons.
Idaho is strong. The biggest men in the conference are on the team, and it is no delicate brand of basketball that the Gem Staters play.
It seems that tonight marks the turning point. It's a difficult hurdle that the varsity must leap.
The balloon still floats full of the air of popular opinion.

Oregon Scoops the World
On Basketball Coaches
Perhaps those who have been heaving bricks at the execu tive council for seating arrangements and kindred sins wir repent upon learning that basketball coach Billie Reinhart has been signed up for five years. The executive council might have gone to sleep and let soult Oregon's basketball prospeets for the next five years appear bright as bright can be.
Reinhart's selection will prove immensely popular with everyone interestec in Oregon's athletics. Reinhart is a splen did coach, a fine sportsman, a sincere worker, and a good man

A motion introduced at faculty meeting yesterday by A. E. Caswell, professor of physics, suggests that transfers other colleges be not admitted to the University of Oregon unless eligible to return to the institution from which they came This motion, it may be assumed, will find favor with the ma jority of the faculty. Flunkers from neighboring colleges unde that ruling, would not find admittance to Oregon, and the Uni versity would be that much better off.
Dr. J. H. Gilbert, acting dean of the college, introduced a motion to exempt students of marked ability from taking the motion to exempt students of marked ability from taking the required year of English after the first term. Considering the press of finances under which the English department is known to be laboring it would seem reasonable that unnecesknown to be laboring it would seem reasonable that un.
sary burdens should not be carried by that department.

Four day examinations are to be tried out. The change is ouly an experiment and is perhaps worth trying, but one fails to see the wisdom of the plan. Three days is long enough for to see the wisdom of the plan. Three days is long enough for
