

Flanagan Hopes For New Record In Broad Jump

Track Athletes Leave For Conference Meet At Palo Alto

Upset of Scores Expected In Saturday Match

BY HAROLD MANGUM
The Oregon track delegation pushed off for Palo Alto yesterday noon to attend the Pacific coast conference convention. A veritable card house of records is expected to come crumbling down about the participating athletes' ears.

Coach Bill Hayward has his eyes on one record of Proctor Flanagan, broad jumper, and is willing to bet a new suit of clothes against a used theater ticket that Flanagan gives an exhibition of the proverbial cow jumping over the moon, or at the very least, betters his old record by a couple of inches.

Athletic Heads Depart
Jack Benefiel, Captain McEwan, and Virgil Earl headed south Monday via the highway. Ken Stephenson and Webster Jones, sports editors of the Emerald accompanied the team. Palo Alto is the mecca this week that is attracting track followers from all over the coast.

The present javelin record of Art Tuck, Oregon, which was hung up in 1921 alone appears safe from marauders as no one has shown earmarks of touching 192 feet, 4 inches, his best heave.

There are at least two men on the coast capable of cutting the 100-yard dash record of :9.8 owned jointly by Kirksey of Stanford and Hurley of Washington. Sweet of Montana and Barber of California are the cinder burners with mercury spikes. Kirksey's record of :21.6 in the 220 is also accessible to fast boys such as Barber and Sweet.

Quarter-mile Mark in Danger
Miller of Stanford has cracked the 440 record of Hendrickson of California at :49.6 half a dozen times in practice and minor meets. Three half-milers, Charteris of Washington, Boyden of California, and Richardson of Stanford, have ambitions of topping Ray Dodge's 880 mark of 1:56.2 Wilde of Washington who holds the mile record of 4:24.5 is again entered, but Schwobeda of Southern California has been stopwatch-watched in 4:23.8 this spring. Devine of Washington State has his eyes on the record of 9:37.5 held by Maginnis of Washington. Devine is rated the finest two mile on the coast this year, but Maginnis' time is considered fairly snug. owns the present low hurdle record of 15 flat. Dye of Southern California has touched :14.6 this spring. Grumbles, a team mate of Dye, has a good chance of bettering the low hurdles mark of :24.4 set by Wells of Stanford in 1920.

Barnes of Southern California is the native son hope in the pole vault. He has bettered the mark of Jenne of Washington State at 13 feet, 5.8 inches several times. Proctor Flanagan is the lad whose job is cut out to beat his own coast record of 23 feet, 5.8 inches in the broad jump. Work, of Stanford, high jumped 6 feet, 5 7-20 inches last year, and is on hand to better his leap.

Houser High in Weights
Bud Houser, Southern California captain, is the man picked to shatter Hartranft's marks in both the discus and shot, while the Stanford relay team is figured a cinch to beat its last year's championship time.

In the event that Proctor Flanagan equals or betters his present record in the broad jump, it is planned to enter him in the national intercollegiate in Chicago next month. His marks have been consistently better both this year and last than the winning distances of the eastern performers.

Professor H. C. Howe Reads Series of Poems

A reading of a series of poems written from the earliest to modern times was given by H. C. Howe, professor of English, to a meeting of the Monday Book club of Eugene at the Osburn hotel, Monday. The lecture was a repetition of the one given by Professor Howe to the Portland poetry society, several weeks ago, which was declared by Portland papers to be one of the best ever given in Portland.

Frosh Track Team To Meet Aggie Rooks In Relays Saturday

As a result of the tryouts held yesterday for the frosh relay team, which meets the Aggie rooks in the annual relay carnival at Corvallis next Saturday, Coach Spike Leslie has selected 16 men to represent the local green-cappers. The events to be held next Saturday afternoon are the 440-yard relay, the half-mile, mile, 3 mile and medley relays. The sprinters who will run in the 440-yard and half-mile relays are: Creed Cheshire, Arthur Ord, Loye McGee, Joe Stannard, George Burnell and Alex Scott.

Four of the five following men will compose the mile relay team: Joe Stannard, Jack Jones, Bill Haggerty, Bill Cruickshank and Jack Nelson.

The three-mile relay team will be taken care of by two half-milers and two milers. The half-milers will probably be Ernest McKittrick, Runar Rasmus, or David Bauman, while the milers will be picked from Harold Little, Edwin Jensen and Robert Hill.

Those who do not compete in the other races will run in the medley, which should be the thrilling event of the afternoon.

The frosh, not to be outdone by their predecessors, are out to win as the freshmen won last year on Hayward field.

Noyes B. Zane Paints Panels for Elsinore New Salem Theater

In the studio of Professor N. B. Zane, instructor in architecture, hang two immense decorative mural panels in the process of being painted. They are being made for the new Elsinore theatre in Salem, recently designed and constructed by Lawrence and Holford, architects of Portland.

One shows Romeo serenading Juliet who, gowned in white, is listening from the balcony. Greens and grays are the predominating colors in the picture. A great amount of research was necessary before the painting was attempted to insure accuracy in every detail. The costumes for the models were procured from San Francisco.

The other painting portrays the three witches from Macbeth grouped about the boiling cauldron. The glow of the firelight reveals the hideous aspects of their faces and blue lights in the liquid itself suggests a poisonous quality. The atmosphere is filled with flitting bats.

which will be sponsored in Sutherlin. Upon the recommendation of William Schulze, in charge of publicity for the cabinet, it was voted to have a bulletin board constructed for the East side of the hut. Posters and bulletins relative to the "Y" work will be placed there.

Poems By Auslander, Essays by Machen Added to Rent Shelf

"Cyclop's Eye," by Joseph Auslander, author of "Sunrise Trumpets," and "The London Adventure," an essay in wandering by Arthur Machen have been added to the rent shelf at the University library.

"Cyclop's Eye" is compared in the publisher's notes with "Sunrise Trumpets," the earlier book of Auslander, which was composed almost entirely of lyrics. The critic has added, "that there still remained the question whether this singer of lovely songs might not be limited in the scope of his ability, whether he was only a lyricist or could write poetry of rugged and sustained power."

Y.M. Committees Make Reports for Next Year

NO GREATER EFFORT ever went into the making of a picture than "The VANISHING AMERICAN"

- It was three years in preparation.
- It was six months in production.
- Every scene with the exception of the modern war sequence was filmed on the actual location described by Zane Grey in his powerful story.
- Ten thousand Indians appear in the picture.
- Crews of Indians constructed roads across the desert where the wheels of wagons had never touched.
- Four thousand horses, 3,500 of them belonging to Indians, take an active part in the production.
- A town of thirty-six buildings including a large stone fort was erected near Yuba City, 80 miles from a railroad. Every sliver was taken there across the worst roads imaginable.
- Four months were spent in Arizona, 165 miles or more from the nearest railroad.
- The highest temperature was 135 degrees. There was no low temperature.

Richard Dix, Lois Wilson, Noah Beery, Malcolm McGregor and all the other players lived the same rough, rugged outdoor life followed by the Indians and the camp crews.

Two thousand men appeared in the modern world war battle scenes. Four batteries of French 75's were also used.

In the earliest Indian-American army battle scenes real Civil War field pieces were used.
