Few will doubt that the regents have acted sincerely, and in the opinions of at least a majority of the board members, for the best interest of the University. The patient and persistent search for a tice. president conducted by the board during the past year, and the success which rewarded the members' efforts, has convinced all friends of the University that the Oregon regents, to the best of their abilities, are endeavoring consistently to advance the welfare of the University. Unfortunately good intentions do not always predicate meritorious accomplishments.
