

Frosh Racket Team Will Play Rooks Saturday

Terry, Carlson Best Bets For Oregon in Coming Tennis Meet

If you should mention tennis to Edward F. Abercrombie, coach speak in terms of the varsity. Somehow the yearling tennis enthusiasts don't seem to rate with him. Needless to say, there will be no big or little "Bills" going to O. A. C. Saturday morning, when "frosh" meet "rooks" for an orgy of racket-wielding at ten o'clock.

The clouds diminish somewhat when Jim Terry, number one and captain of Oregon's cohorts starts to talk. He views the oncoming fray with a little less pessimism than Edward F., although his belief in his fellowmen is far from certain. Terry swung a racket three years for Oakland high school, and last season reached the semi-finals in the California State tournament.

In number two position rests Stewart Carlson, premier lob-artist from Bend high. When paired with Terry, he will become one half of the babes' best doubles combination. Both of these boys are fairly consistent in their service and drives, and with any luck at all should bring home their part of "Swift's Premium."

Darold Elkins, Warren Tinker, James Webb, and James Werschul, play numbers three, four, five, and six, respectively. The first two join up and form the second doubles team. Little is known concerning the tennis experience of these gentlemen, but it can be said that a couple of them have seen a racket before.

It is seldom that the frosh lose to the rooks in tennis. Last spring here, the meet ended 7-0 for Oregon. At O. A. C. in the return match, there was a different tale to tell, for the heaver babes rallied and took the tournament by a close score. Should the frosh be defeated Saturday, they will have a chance for revenge when the rooks wend their way hither.

American Shipping Is Discussed Before Foreign Trade Group

"The American foreign trader does not think in terms of ships, but the time is coming when he will have to. If American shipping is to develop, and it must, there must be American ships to handle that shipping," said W. A. Sexton, assistant general manager of the Columbia Pacific Shipping Company, of Portland, in an address before the foreign trade students in the school of business administration Thursday afternoon.

Foreign trade and the shipping industry are married to each other, Mr. Sexton said, the interests of one are vital to the interests of the other. "In the last few years," he said, "America has rapidly developed from an agricultural to an industrial nation. America must have an outlet for her industrial products, and foreign trade, through American shipping, provides that outlet."

Trade conferences that bring together all transportation interests are essential to the interests of both the shipping and the foreign trade industries, according to Mr. Sexton. Such conferences stabilize the rates and eliminate much wasteful competition, he said, making the business transactions more profitable for all concerned.

Mr. Sexton outlined the organization of a modern steamship company. It is divided into three divisions, operating, traffic, and finance, he said. The operating department has charge of the mechanical department of the ships and wharves of the company. The duties of the traffic department, he said, are to keep the vessels supplied with cargoes at all times, to keep in touch with foreign market conditions, and to arrange the shipping rates. The finance department, as its name indicates, takes care of the accounts of the company.

Examinations Will be Given By New Method

Master's Degree Candidates In Business Ad School To Take Tests

An entirely new method of examination will be used in the examination of John Vaughn, Harold Elkington, and William Fowler, candidates for the degree of master of business administration June 1, 2, 3, according to Dean E. C. Robbins of the school of business administration.

"The examinations will be given by the entire staff of the school of business administration and will be confined to one comprehensive business problem covering accounting, foreign trade, personnel of business administration, and all other phases of work covered by the students in the school, rather than the numerous isolated questions on isolated cases, as has previously been the case," Dean Robbins said.

This is an example of the new methods that are being installed in other departments of the university.

Similar problems were given to two candidates at their preliminary examinations during the winter term, and proved very satisfactory. It is believed that this will be the first masters examination of this kind to be given in the United States, Dean Robbins said. Vaughn graduated from New Mexico Agricultural College in 1926. He has prepared his thesis on "Personnel Work in Department Stores." Elkington and Fowler both graduated from Whitman College in 1925. The subjects of their theses are "Installment Buying," and "The Competitive Position of the Port of Portland."

Dear friends:

Several times this week we've had people in the store mentioning this ad.

But as I often remark to my salary, "You don't go far enough."

There's a bell on the boss's cash register and if it doesn't keep ringing all day, he thinks my advertising is punk.

So, for heaven's sake, come in and see what we're offering this week in Fancy Beads and Earrings.

If you don't say they're worth the money, I'll eat 'em.
