

Oregon Loses In First Round Of Net Tourney

Huskies, Stanford Aces, Beat Their Opponents Between Showers

Okerberg and Neer Star For Webfooters

WITH the northwest tennis title depending on the outcome of the second doubles match, the last of the day, Plummer and Brown of the Huskies overcame a 5 to 1 lead in the first set and defeated Edge and Hartman of Oregon, 8-6, 6-3.

This marks the second time in as many years, that Washington has cinched the northern championship, and left Oregon as runner-up. Yesterday was dark and cold, taking the keen edge off the players; throughout most of the matches a slight drizzle fell, and at one time players and spectators were forced to scurry for shelter from a near cloud-burst. The singles were just getting well started when the deluge fell and play could not be resumed for more than an hour.

Huskies Lose by Default

Neer and Okerberg were the outstanding performers for the Webfooters. Neer's steadiness and accurate placements, and Okerberg's blinding net work and service were almost unfathomable. The style of play used by these two men is a direct contrast, but paired together they make an ideal doubles combination. Neer is very cautious and takes advantage of every break, coming up to the net only when there is a certain possibility of making a kill. Okerberg follows his fast twisting service to the net, and is all set for a smash. His long reach and ability to cover the court make him a dangerous man to lob to.

Neer, playing won from Dranga by default. Neer took the first set easily, 6-1, but Dranga was coming to the front in the second set, and was leading 2-1 when the rain came. Dranga had motored from Seattle Thursday, and the exposure affected his eyes, so that he was unable to continue his match with Neer, being forced to drop out of the doubles.

Okerberg won a brilliant three-set duel from Clark, 6-1, 2-6, 6-3. Clark found a weak spot in Okerberg's defense and hammered away at his back-hand to win three straight games and the second set. Okerberg's aggressiveness and his work at the net outshone his back-hand weakness and enabled him to take the next set and the match.

The Huskies triumphed in the other singles matches, winning from Hartman, Edge, and Cross. Hartman took the first set, 7-5, after the rain had necessitated a halt. Plummer rallied in the next two, however, taking them both by 6-2 margins.

Edge, Webfoot man, lost to Schwartz in straight sets. The first set went to Schwartz at love, but Edge made a fight of it in the second and carried it to 7-5. Cross came out on the short end of a three set affair with Brown. Cross went through the first set in whirlwind fashion, winning it 6-2. Brown seemed to find new life in the interval between showers and won the next two, 6-4 and 6-3.

Oregon Doubles Good

Oregon's first doubles combination, Neer and Okerberg, had little trouble in downing Schwartz and Clark of the Huskies in straight sets, 6-2, 6-3. The Webfoot pair have remarkable team work, and their stroking was as near perfect as the rawness of the weather would permit. They should give Ogden and Herrington, of Stanford, a stiff battle when they meet today.

The powerful Cardinal team made a clean sweep of the Aggie racketweilders. In the singles, no Orange-man was able to win more than two games in one set. Speerows and Atkinson managed to take four games in the second set of their doubles match with Herrington and Ogden.

Oregon will meet the Cards at 9:00 this morning and the Aggies at 10:00.

Yearling Track Squad Defeats Rooks, 63-59

Frosh Spill Dope, Taking Nine Firsts; O. A. C. Gives Battle

Friday proved to be an all-frosh day. Not only did they lick the sophs in the morning but the freshman track team went to Corvallis and licked the highly-rated Beaver rooks. The frosh came to the fore with a 63 to 59 victory.

The meet started true to form when Coach Grant Swans, rooks, took all three places in the mile. Instead of having the heart taken out of the coach, Del Oberbauer's frosh staged a comeback, and proceeded to take nine firsts in 14 events.

Probably the best race of the meet was the half-mile between Web Hayes of the frosh and Farrow of the rooks. After trailing the field the first laps they started a sprint at the 600 mark that lasted to the finish. Three steps from the tape Farrow started to fall while Hayes managed to get a step farther. Hayes fell at the tape breaking it in his fall and Farrow fell on top of him.

The rest of the races were close and before the relay the score stood 59 to 58 in the rooks' favor.

Members of the team are asked that a picture be taken at 4:15, Tuesday, on Hayward field.

Four University Students Conquer Roaring McKenzie on Canoe Trip

Narrow Escapes, Shooting Rapids, Catching Fish, Prove Intensely Interesting

The tumultuous upper McKenzie river was conquered for perhaps the first time in history when Amos Burg, Prince Helfrich, John Bean and Frank Sparks, University students, rode the raging river for over 36 miles from McKenzie bridge to Deerhorn ferry last week-end. Helfrich, who understands the treacherous river like a brother, escorted the canoe with his own boat, accompanied by Sparks.

For the entire distance, the river presents a furious aspect, brawling and boiling along a narrow and rugged channel, cascading over 30 violent rapids, and tossed the canoe and boat about like bits of driftwood. At times both crafts were almost buried in the roaring surges as they glided safely among the ragged boulders.

The McKenzie, fed by the glaciers in the Three Sisters, heads in Clear lake at 3300 feet elevation above the sea and thunders 86 miles on its wild onrush to the Willamette. A short distance below the lake it disappears into the McKenzie lava beds for three miles, finally spouting out of a crevasse and resuming its boisterous career by descending over the three pitches of the Southern Pacific falls, some six miles above the embarkation point of the four voyagers.

At many of the rapids a portage was impossible, owing to the precipitous banks and the rich verdure that hung into the river and swept back and forth in the roaring current. Both crafts ran every rapid in the river. The men took photographs at most of them which will be used as illustrations in an article that Burg is preparing for the Oregonian.

The Martin Rapid, 23 miles below McKenzie bridge, and doomed, it seems, to be the scene of many disasters on the river, offered the most promising prospects of ending the trip with a bath for the entire party. It was safely run by the canoe after Helfrich and Sparks had made a successful descent in the boat.

The canoe in running the Gate Creek rapid played such antics in riding the smoking crests of the combers that at times Bean, who was the steersman, could not reach the water with his six foot paddle; other times the water was up to his elbows. Shortly below this place an unnamed rapid was christened the "Jumping Frank" by the party, after Frank Sparks who was tossed several feet into the air when the boat jumped the crest of a giant comb. He was sitting in the stern of the canoe when he went into the air and landed head first in the bow.

According to Helfrich who has fished the river since he was old enough to eat beefsteak, the trout in the McKenzie show a slimmer waistline than lake-raised trout. This is caused by a turbulent environment that compel them to wage a ceaseless battle against the currents of the river. A trout placed in the waters of Clear lake will grow to resemble a bar tender at the end of a year compared to his twin brother on the lower river who will only be half as large.

Although 63 was agreed upon as the official number of trout caught by the party, six was the limit that could be hooked on their lines. A speckled trout that Helfrich hooked was swallowed by a cannibalistic Dolly Varden before it was landed which brought in two fish on one hook. Experienced fishermen seldom fish with more than two hooks on their lines yet they passed an amateur who had crowded his line with over 17 hooks, evidently intent on catching all his fish with one haul.

Both Bean and Helfrich are geology majors and spent considerable time in the study of formations along the river. Sparks is a sophomore in physics. The canoe used on the voyage was the same one that carried Burg on his 3000 mile cruise down the northwest coast and the Columbia river last summer.

Biographies and Autobiographies Prove Popular

Hawthorne and Emerson Among Subjects of 6 New at Library

Autobiographies and biographies of men we have heard of all our lives and some that we have never heard of are much in vogue at the present time. Six books of this nature are among the latest shipment that the library has received.

The first complete and intimate biography of Nathaniel Hawthorne is given us by Lloyd Morris in "The Rebellious Puritan." The book is a portrait of Mr. Hawthorne. "Emerson and Others" is the title of Van Wyck Brook's book on several famous men. The study of Emerson is outstanding among these.

"To understand him is to understand life and human beings," has been said of Charles Darwin. George A. Dorsey makes one understand him better in his book, "The Evolution of Charles Darwin."

"Palmerston," is written by Philip Guedalla. This is the first full length historical study that Mr.

Guedalla has given us since "The Second Empire." "Edwin Arlington Robinson," is written by Mark Van Doren. "An American Saga," by Carl Christian Jensen is the true story of Mr. Jensen's life. Other new books in the library include: "The Poms of Satan," in which Edgar Saltus, author, exposes his whims, his ideas, pictures the past, forecasts the future, and deprecates the present is replete with grace and graciousness and full of a delicate charm. With rare clairvoyance, Mr. Saltus includes the German Kaiser in a chapter on "Hyenas," wherein stalk the blood-stained shadows of Attila, Cesare Borgia and Ivan the Terrible. Other chapters have as clever touches as "Hyenas." The book is one of the newest received at the library.
